Pneumonia Takes Life Of Cardinal Gasparri; Served Under 3 Popes

Vatican Dignitary Seals Death Room

World Famous Worker Remained Cheerful Until the End.

Rome, Nov. 18 (AP).—Pietro Cardinal Gasparri, wartime secretary of state for the Vatican and a powerful influence in the cause of universal peace, died of pneumonia shortly after 10:30 p. m. today at the age of 82.

Stricken last week with influenza, the aged cardinal sank steadily during the day, and tonight his heart stopped. At 5 p. m. Archbishop Ottaviani, undersecretary of state, imparted the special blessing of Pope Pius. Extreme unction was administered yesterday.

Cardinal Enrico Gasparri, the prelate's nephew, immediately notified Pope Pius of the death. A high prelate and a Vatican judicial officer went to the cardinal's apartment and sealed the door of his study.

Oxygen Administered.

To bolster a steadily weakening heart, oxygen was administered by the cardinal's physicians.

Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, Gasparri's successor in office, visited the dying prelate during the evening. His nephew, Enrico Cardinal Gasparri, celebrated a final mass this morning at his uncle's villa, and administered communion.

Cardinal Gasparri had been secretary of state under three popes, and was regarded as the most noted prelate in the Catholic Church after Pope Pius himself. Cardinals and high church dignitaries had flocked to his home during the last days of his life to pay him tribute.

Gasparri in 1932 was nominated by the Pope to head the Church after his death, but Gasparri died first. He was regarded as one of the most able diplomats that ever occupied the secretary of state's post as well as one of the Church's outstanding authorities on canon law. He was a strong opponent of fascism.

Notables at Bedside.

At the bedside when the end came were Cardinal Gasparri's confessor, Father Modesto; his physicians, Dr. Petacci and Dr. Zeri; his nephew, Cardinal Enrico Gasparri; another nephew, Archbishop Bernardini, apostolic delegate to Australia, together with other nephews and nieces and many prelates.

Cardinals, prelates, and civil dignitaries, including the governors of Rome and Vatican City, visited his house during the day and signed the register betokening hope for his recovery.

Almost until the end Gasparri retained a clear mind. Although the doctors imposed silence, hoping to conserve his strength, he laughed and joked with his nurses.

Late this afternoon his doctors performed a second blood-letting operation, hoping to better his heart action, but the expedient was of no avail. His heart continued to weaken.

Cardinal Gasparri had one of the

D. C. Weather Freak-Ridden

Ghostly Halo Around Moon and Morning Twilight Are Explained.

Washington's moon was pale and ghostly last night, ringed by a misty halo.

The unusual phenomnon is occasioned, according to the Weather Bureau, by a very thin and high layer of clouds in a sheet formation. These cirrus clouds break up the light rays to create the visual illusion of a sort of rainbow-ring around the moon.

The moon-halo and the rainbow are formed by the same principles, except that the refracted light of the halo is nearly colorless in comparison with the vivid hues of the rainbow.

The haloes come in two sizes, the meteorological experts said, and last night's moon-ring was full-size, measuring 45 degrees, the small haloes come at 22 degrees, astronomically measured.

Another unusual trick of the Washington climate came yesterday morning, when a haze darkened the breakfast-hour over parts of the city. The very fine fog, settling like a premature twilight over the town, was caused by the night radiation from the ground, which cooled more swiftly than the warm air, condensing the vapor as a light fog.

Neither of the phenomena is good for a weather prediction, said the bureau, although there is a sentimental background of superstition that the first young person to see the moon-ring will be married soon.

Girl Is Killed, Score Injured In City Traffic

Honeymoon Couple Hurt; Year-Old Baby Suffers in Collision.

One killed and more than a score injured, several critically, were the Capital's week-end traffic toll.

Miss Eva B. Lloyd, of Hyattsville, 24-year-old Washington Post circulation solicitor, was found to be dead on arrival at Casualty Hospital after a collision at Minnesota and Pennsylvania avenues southeast early yesterday in which five others, including a honeymooning bride and bridegroom, were injured.

Drivers of both cars, Catherine Linquist, 22, of 3922 Thirteenth street northeast and Herbert R. Franklin, 25, of 933 L street northwest, were being held pending investigation by the coroner.

Victims in Hospital.

Miss Linquist was in Georgetown Hospital suffering from internal injuries, her condition undetermined. Franklin, with cuts and bruises, was in Gallinger Hospital, with the bridegroom, Raymond Franklin, 29, of Richmond, injured internally, and in a serious condition, and his bride, Caroline, 22, who received back injuries.

Riding with Miss Linquist was Richard Redford 22, of 48 Eighth street northwest, who received lacerations of the face and body and was taken to Casualty Hospital.

Police said the accident occurred as Miss Linquist attempted to turn into Minnesota avenue. The Franklin car overturned.

Six persons were injured in Falls Church, Va., when John Gheen, 32, driving a car containing six passengers, attempted to pass a truck on a hill and collided head-on with an automobile driven by H. J. Powell, of Fairfax, Va.

Nazis Score Victory In Danzig Elections

Danzig, Nov. 18 (AP).—A clear-cut Nazi victory was shown today by incomplete returns in the first communal elections here since the Nazis took over the administration of the city.

Hitler forces were using the elections to demonstrate to the world that the era of the old party system was definitely over. The campaign was bitter. German nationalists entered into a united front with the Catholic center in the hope of defeating the Nazis.

Chest's Drive Is Intensified By Shortage

Workers Shift Into High With Only Three Days Left to Canvass.

Faced with the necessity of raising one-third of the 1935 budget in three days, Community Chest leaders threw the annual fund campaign into high gear yesterday.

Taking advantage of the holiday, solicitors went into every section of the city seeking contributions. Their collections will be tabulated at the seventh Chest report luncheon in the Willard Hotel ballroom at 12:15 p. m. today.

The next three days are viewed by Chest leaders as the crucial period of the campaign. Latest available reports give the total to date as $1,118,320.11, or $556,679.89 short of the quota needed to finance the relief work of the Chest's 64 member organizations.

Deficit Reduced.

Collections yesterday are expected to materially reduce the remaining quota, though drive officials had no means of calculating the success of their workers over Sunday, and H. L. Rust, jr., campaign chairman, was quick to caution all units against overconfidence.

Based on returns Saturday, workers must average approximately $186,000 in the last three days of the drive—today, tomorrow and Wednesday.

Missing Boy Found With Hiking Girl

Had Traveled From Lexington, Ky., to Chattanooga.

Young Woman Will Be Accused of Kidnaping.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Nov. 18 (AP).—Missing from his home in Lexington, Ky., since Thursday night, 4-year-old Jackie Gibbons was found here today in company of a young woman, who told police officers that the boy followed her away and that she "became afraid" and let him accompany her. A kidnaping charge was placed against her. She gave her name as Bernice Lou Givens, 18, and said she had lived in Cincinnati.

A newspaper story of the missing boy led to his discovery. Lawrence Harvey, who gave the woman and child shelter last night, read about the missing Jackie Gibbons today and notified police. The boy previously had told his name.

H. H. Sully, radio patrolman, made the arrest at the north Chattanooga home of Harvey. The boy was playing in the yard when the officer arrived. He was identified definitely after a telephone conversation with his father, John L. Gibbons, a contracting company employe, at Lexington.

Said Boy Was Her Brother.

Sully said that at first the young woman insisted that the boy was her brother and that the boy verified her story until the officer got him by himself and bought him an ice cream cone. Later, under questioning of Police Capt. Dan Grant and Sergt. Taylor Jones, the prisoner said the boy followed her from Lexington and they had hitchhiked since.

At the meeting with Capt. Grant and Sergt. Jones, with a newspaper reporter present, the woman said she was "walking on Limestone street in Lexington and the child was playing in the grass."

The child, she said, followed her. "I was eating candy and he asked me to give him some and I did," she said. Thereupon, she told the officers, the boy continued to follow her despite her instructions that he "go back."

Tired and not knowing exactly where the boy lived, the woman said they sat down and she intended to "run off and leave him." But when she started, the prisoner related, the boy began to cry and she "became afraid" and decided to take him along.

"I decided to take him along with me and if they caught me I would tell them the whole thing."

Jackie and His Father Talk Over Telephone

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 18 (AP).—John Lawrence Gibbons, red-eyed and haggard from loss of sleep over the disappearance of his 4-year-old boy, Jackie, satisfied himself on the telephone today that the boy found in Chattanooga was his son.

"Hello Jackie," Gibbons said.

"Hi, Daddy," the child responded.

The young woman hitch-hiker, who first told Chattanooga police the boy followed her from his home and she became afraid and let him accompany her, was later said by Chattanooga police to have admitted she lured the child away

Silver Truck Found With Stalled Motor

Ossining, N. Y., Nov. 18 (AP).—Motor trouble was responsible for the disappearance of a 10-ton truck transporting 19,000 pounds of silver sludge from Rochester, N. Y., to Irvington, N. J., it was learned today.

State police found the truck, which left Rochester Tuesday, stalled on Highland avenue, its load intact and its crew safe. Value of the silver sludge was estimated by Eastman Kodak Co. officials to be between $10,000 and $20,000.

League Holds War in Chaco Violates Pact

Paraguay, Bolivia Face Penalties for Border Hostilities.

Cooperation of U. S. Is Asked in New Move to Halt Bloodshed.

Geneva, Nov. 18 (AP).—Paraguay and Bolivia were informed today in the report of the League of Nations' Chaco consultative committee that by engaging in war they have broken the covenant of the league.

The report hinted, without actually saying so, that the league may be forced to impose penalties on the warring South American nations. Under the covenant the league is empowered to sever economic, financial and diplomatic relations with belligerents.

By laying down their arms and accepting the committee's peace plan, it was intimated, this possibility could be averted.

The committee's carefully prepared report, embodying the most comprehensive peace plan ever created in the League of Nations, was published just as news came from the Chaco Boreal that Paraguay had won sweeping victories by the capture of Bolivia's long-coveted Fort Ballivian.

Conference Called.

Referring to a breach of the covenant through resorting to warfare, the report said the league assembly, which is to meet day after tomorrow in special session to consider the Chaco war, "might simply note the situation and draw its consequences, but deems its first duty is to assist two members of the league to devise a basis of lasting peace."

The assembly was asked to record its hope that the belligerents would accept its recommendations, and also to record its judgement that the parties have not fulfilled their undertakings under article 12 of the covenant.

This article obligates members to submit to arbitration any dispute likely to lead to war, and not to resort to war until three months after the decision of the arbiters.

Another solemnly couched warning was addressed to the belligerents in the preamble of the section which provided for creation of an advisory commission to follow the execution of the recommendations. The preamble says the league may deal with any matter affecting world peace.

United States Aid Sought.

The text agreed to by the Chaco committee for submission to the special assembly provided first for cessation of hostilities and measures of security, and placed particular emphasis on the desirability of obtaining the cooperation of the United States and Brazil.

In connection with cessation of hostilities a neutral advisory commission is to be set up, consisting of six members designated by Argentina, Chile, Peru and Uruguay. Space was left for other states to designate members, pre-

Astounded Driver Finds a Monkey In His Machinery

There are real monkeyshines going on in Alexandria these days.

Herbert Burton, of Woodlawn, Va., drove into a service station on South Washington street night before last, and told Lloyd Carver, a mechanic, that his motor was missing.

Carver lifted the hood. A monkey, sitting on the horn, gaped, squeaked, leaped, and skedaddled away.

Later a modest young lady on the same street screamed. The shameless monkey was peeking through her window. Yesterday he was reported gamboling on Washington street.

Burton recalled having driven slowly past trucks of a road show parked near Woodlawn. He thought the monkey might have climbed onto the motor along the drive shaft. Anyhow, that's the story.

Lonely Equatorial Island Discloses Bodies Of Couple Who Perished as Ships Passed

Signals Unseen by Boats; Pair Victims of Thirst and Hunger.

Los Angeles, Nov. 18 (AP).—Fragmentry wireless messages from a fishing boat cruising about the Galapagos Islands, near the equator, were pieced today into a tragedy of death that overcame a man and a woman on a lonely chalk-white beach as they strove to attract the attention of ships.

Communication between the fishing boat, the Santa Amaro, and the Mackay radio station here told the story of a lingering death from thirst and starvation.

A German passport found in the man's clothing was made out to Alfred Rudolph Lorenz, of Paris, but there was no means of identifying the woman.

Capt. G. Allan Hancock, Los Angeles oil millionaire and explorer, who has made several scientific trips to the Galapagos Islands, said he believed the couple were Mr. and Mrs. Wittmer, who lived on Charles Island.

Hint of a possible third death on tiny Marchena Island was seen in the finding of baby's clothing near the man and the woman, but there was no child's body.

Communication with the fishing boat brought out that a letter found near the bodies was dated July 12, 1934, and to judge from its contents it was to have been picked up by the man at Santa Maria Islands and to be taken to San Cristobal Island on the irregular mail route.

Apparently the couple had been blown off their course, and had landed on Marchena Island where their signals failed to attract attention, and where, eventually, they died.

The islands are under the jurisdiction of Ecuador.

The message from Capt. Rodriguez read:

"Passing Marchena Island in the Galapagos group today, small skiff sighted on beach in latitude 24 minutes north and longitude 90 degrees 32 minutes 30 seconds west. On investigation found decomposed bodies of man and woman. Woman appeared to have light complexion and of slight build. The man was large and slightly bald. Most of his clothing appeared to have been of American manufacture.

"Found German passport made out to Alfred Rudolph Lorenz, Paris, and a French identification card bearing same name. Nearby was parcel of letters from Santa Maria Island and several photos. Most of the letters bore name of Margaret Wittmer, of Santa Maria Island.

"One letter was addressed to Capt. Allen Hancock, of Los Angeles, Calif.

Utilities Facing Fight Over Rates Set by TVA, Is Roosevelt Warning

"Happy Days Are Here Again"

President Roosevelt as he smilingly told crowds throughout the South that the New Deal was on its way to greater triumphs.

Advocates Community Ownership of More Power Projects.

Address in Valley Voices Optimism

'New Look on People's Faces,' He Declares at Tupelo, Miss.

(Post Staff Writer).

Aboard Presidential Special Train, En Route to Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 18.—Radiating optimism, President Roosevelt told a crowd gathered at Tupelo, Miss., today that "all is well with the country and we are coming back."

At the same time, the President frankly advocated wide community ownership of power utilities as a means to force down rates.

The President's speech, which was informal, breezy and impromptu in so far as he spoke without the aid of notes, came as a startling climax to his three-day tour of the Tennessee Valley experiment.

Sees Example Copied.

"What you are doing here," he told the citizens of Tupelo, which was the first city to acquire its own power system and contract for TVA current, "is going to be copied in every State in the Union before we get through."

This staggering blow at private interests, which carried the President farther along the New Deal road to public ownership than ever before, was followed up with this remark:

"We recognize that there will be a certain amount of—what shall I say?—rugged opposition to this development, but I think we recognize also that the opposition is fading as the weeks and the months go by, fading in the light of practical experience."

New Note of Confidence.

As he spoke these words, and went on to add, somewhat belligerently, that the Government can teach a good many business men a lesson in good business, observers remarked a new note of confidence. It was apparent that the President, fortified by his overwhelming election victory, is now aiming straight ahead.

As interpreted by those close to the Chief Executive, his speech was

Chamber Hits 30-Hour Week In New Blast

Business, Labor, However, Agree Recovery Is Well on Way.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which a few days ago lined up with the Roosevelt Administration in a drive toward better times, yesterday punctuated its assurances of cooperation with a blast against a uniform 30-hour week for labor.

At the same time, the American Federation of Labor, in a monthly survey of industrial conditions, reported that business sentiment has "apparently turned toward optimism."

The committee on manufacture of the Chamber of Commerce, in a report sent out to the membership, took a definite stand not only against the 30-hour week but against any other limitation of the hours of labor by statute.

Opposes Statutory Curbs.

"The committee is convinced," said the report, "that statutory limitations on hours of work are uneconomic and disadvantageous to employes and to the general consuming public.

"Reductions in hours already made have lowered the living standards of large numbers of workers. Additional restrictions on weekly hours of work would result in contraction of output and further loss of purchasing power. Lasting economic recovery and improvement in general standards of living can come only through progressive advances in volume of business."

To produce a maximum volume of business and employment, the report said, hour and wage standards must be suited to the requirements of each business enterprise.

This stand by the Chamber of Commerce emphasized the gulf between organized business and organized labor, for the American Federation of Labor is just as emphatic in its advocacy of the 30-hour

Mrs. Mary Harriman Rumsey, New York, Washington and Virginia society matron, injured Saturday when pinned beneath her horse while fox hunting near Middleburg, Va., was reported as slightly improved at Emergency Hospital last night.

Cooperation Seen as Two Boards Meet

New Spirit Expected Between Federal Reserve and Advisory Council.

By Elliott Thurston.

Another imortant development in the recently inaugurated era of cooperation between the New Deal and the banking-business world is expected to result from meetings beginning here today between the Federal Reserve Board and members of the Federal Advisory Council.

At the invitation of Walter E. Frew, of the advisory council, members of the reserve board and the council will meet at luncheon. On both sides the expressed purpose is to promote a spirit of cooperation, which has been conspicuously absent and was most notably advertised in the recent refusal of the reserve board to receive the advisory council's recommendations on monetary and fiscal policy.

Marriner S. Eccles, newly appointed governor of the Reserve Board, formally takes over his new office today, coincident with what promises to be a renewal of cordial relations with the dozen members of the advisory council. That is the purpose of Mr. Frew, who is chairman of the Corn Exchange Bank of New York, and of others of the council. And the same viewpoint is echoed by members of the

Scrub's Great Run To Get Into Game Must Go Unsung

Milwaukee, Nov. 18 (AP).—The longest run of Marquette University's 38 to 0 victory over Creighton in Omaha yesterday will never get into the record books, Coach Frank Murray reported today.

It was a 173-yard dash made by a fourth-string quarter back.

Late in the game, Murray decided to use Fritzie Glojek, 135-pound "scrub" who had made the trip as a reward for never having been late for practice in two years.

Fritzie was holding the yard sticks on the 30-yard line on the opposite side of the field when Murray sent for him. The little fellow, who had never been in a game, started sprinting for the seat of strategy—the long way around.

Seventy yards up the sidelines he scampered, 53 yards across the gridiron and 50 yards back down the border to Murray. He received official word of his selection and collapsed, all in from his run. He recovered in time to play the last two minutes.

Boarder Goes for Gun After Quarrel in Maryland Home.

"When he got the gun, I thought he was joking."

These were the only words Mrs. Avis Strohl, 37, of Union Bridge, Carroll County, Md., was able to gasp last night in the kitchen of her home, when she was found with two bullets in her body.

Near her on the floor was the body of Harry Gordon Bush, 53, the only boarder in her home, with a bullet wound in the temple. A .32-caliber gun was near Bush's hand.

The two were found by a neighbor, George Otto, who heard three shots shortly after 5 p. m. and investigated. Police, reconstructing the shooting, said that Bush had shot Mrs. Strohl after a quarrel and then had turned the gun on himself. The two were the only persons living in the house.

Bush, formerly a locomotive engineer on the Western Maryland Railroad, had been out of work for the past six months. He had been separated from his wife, Mrs. Anna Bush, of Philadelphia, Pa., for 12 years. Other survivors are his two sons, Harry and John Bush, also of Philadelphia.

Bush had boarded with Mrs. Strohl for the last eight years. She was divorced ten years ago from her husband, and has a daughter, Mrs. Mary Cripe, of Norristown, Pa.

Bush's body was taken to an undertaker's establishment in Taneytown, Md.

Mrs. Strohl was taken to Maryland General Hospital, Baltimore, where she was given an even chance to recover.

U.S. Discloses Europe Hoards 2 Billion Gold

Federal Reserve Board Reports Increase in Secret Holdings.

(Associated Press.)

New disappearances of foreign gold into Europe's huge pool of "unreported" holdings were disclosed by the Federal Reserve Board yesterday as Capital money experts kept a weather eye on gold bloc nations abroad.

A pointed reference by the board that "since the end of August there appears to have been some increase again in unreported gold holdings" in western Europe—attributed generally to hoarding by individuals and commercial banks or buyings by British equalization fund—was receved as further tangible testimony that this country is eager to prevent any new disruptions of international monetary relations which have settled to a fair stability in recent months.

Belgium Given Support.

Improved commercial relations were the obvious goal of present Treasury policy, which began by letting down the bars on capital exports and more recently has indicated stabilization fund activities in Belgium to support that nation's gold monetary unit, the belga.

Both Treasury and Federal Reserve officials maintained the policy of secrecy which from the start has surrounded operations of Secretary Morgenthau's $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund. But official Reserve Board figures showing the system's 12 banks have a $15,765,000 "loan" on foreign gold were regarded by observers as ample hint that Washington had bought gold in Brussels to supply dollar exchange to stem the recent capital flight out of Belgium.

That the exact amount of the purchase was $25,000,000 could not be confirmed. The figure in itself was not regarded as important since stabilization operations may vary widely from day to day.

$2,229,800 Gold Landed.

Added evidence that the Reserve banks' loans on gold had been extended to the National Bank of Belgium was found in the landing Saturday of $2,229,800 of gold from Belgium. What the Reserve banks listed as loans was interpreted here simply as a temporary bookkeeping arrangement developing into an actual purchase when the gold has arrived and been transferred to the Treasury—the only legal owner of monetary gold in the United States.

Belgium's recent monetary distress and a cabinet turnover in France have served to raise doubts of Europe's gold stability. But the situation was not judged sufficiently threatening here for Morgenthau to forego a Southern vacation during President Roosevelt's own absence in Warm Springs.

Europe's Hoards Increase.

The Reserve Board said that from England's suspension of the gold standard in 1931 to the end of 1933, "nearly $2,000,000,000 of gold is estimated to have gone into unreported holdings in western Europe."

Looking at the internal condition of currency in the United States, where all gold has been gathered into the Treasury, the board found there was still $600,000,000 more cash outstanding in large-size bills than when hoarding began in October, 1930.

The Reserve Board said an average $100,000,000 larger volume of circulating currency in September and October as compared with a year ago "has reflected an increase in the demand for currency arising from an enlarged volume of wage payments and retail trade at higher prices, offset in part by a return of currency from hoarding."

Florida Flier Starts Service

7-Hour-30-Minute Flight From Newark to Miami Begins Today.

Taking off from the Newark airport at 3:40 p. m., the Florida Flier, a low-winged Douglas transport plane, similar to the one in which Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker set a new transcontinental record, today inaugurates a new 7 hour and 30 minute schedule between New York and Miami.

Reaching Miami at 12:07 a. m. after stops at Washington, Raleigh, Savannah and Jacksonville, the ship will cut previous Eastern Air Lines schedule for the trip by four hours.

The night Florida Flier will leave the airport at 10:40 p. m. stopping at Charleston, but skipping Raleigh and Savannah en route. The skip-stop schedules were made necessary, officials of the company explained, because the Douglas is a high-speed plane designed to operate on long jumps.

Return flights will be made from Miami today at 10 a. m. and 7:30 p. m., arriving at Newark at 7:10 p. m. and 4:20 a. m. respectively. The day flight will stop at Jacksonville, Savannah, Raleigh and Washington, the flying time being 7 hours and 40 minutes. The night plane is scheduled to stop at Jacksonville, Charleston and Washington in 7 hours and 20 minutes flying time. Elapsed time on all schedules will be 50 minutes longer because of stops.

Man Kills Son-in-Law, Wife, Turns Gun on Self

Salt Lake City, Nov. 18 (AP).—Charles B. Crowther, 61, was jailed here today after the slaying of his wife and son-in-law, Marvin Belger. Crowther attempted to commit suicide.

Witnesses were quoted as saying that Crowther became angry during what they described as a "drinking party." Belger, witnesses said, attempted to disarm Crowther. A charge from the shotgun killed him instantly.

Between You and Me

New NRA Board, Headed by Clay Williams, Does Not Confide in Public.

—By Raymond Clapper

NRA has retreated behind the opaque curtains of bureaucracy. It has thrown the public out on its ear. By its actions, the NRA board has told the public that it is nobody's business what goes on in those hundreds of offices in the Department of Commerce Building where a group of Government officials are ruling American industry.

The present NRA board, headed by Clay Williams, was appointed seven weeks ago. A few days later Mr. Williams yielded reluctantly to considerable pressure and held one conference with the press at which he said nothing. That is the extent to which the new regime at NRA has taken the public into its confidence. Repeated efforts to obtain further meetings with Williams have been futile.

NRA has one of the largest and best publicity staffs in the Government, but Mr. Williams has refused to give it any information. It has been ignored. About all that these NRA press officials know is what they glean from newspaper men. Expert officials have been warned against letting any information leak out. They are seriously embarrassed when their old friends among newspaper correspondents drop in to obtain some guidance as to what NRA is driving at.

Jobs Are In Jeopardy.

As a result of this sealing of the of the Blue Eagle roost, numerous rumors about conditions in NRA are circulating in Washington. Tales are heard of inside friction, of subordinates in constant terror of their jobs, of paralyzing buck-passing, of flagrant racketeering by some code authorities in the handling of the huge sums they collect from business men under Government authority, of NRA agents blackjacking business men into subscribing to codes by threatening to throw them in jail—one such case happened in Texas recently, but the business man summoned his lawyer who called NRA's bluff and nothing happened. Many of these stories are a mixture of truth and exaggeration. By refusing authentic information NRA encourages them.

Probably the new NRA policy of refusing to take the public into its confidence arises partly from the fact that the chairman of the new board is a man of little public experience. Mr. Williams was a successful lawyer and then became top executive of a large tobacco concern. That was private business.

Now he is head of a public body and one of the most powerful in the Government. It reaches out to tell a battery maker in Pennsylvania how he shall run his business. It tells a gas company in the West that it had better get under the plumber's code and be quick about it. Daily it is making the laws under which business must operate. Any public agency with as much power as that can not pull down its blinds, tell the public to mind its own business, and get away with it for very long.

Experienced public officials seldom make such a mistake as that. If they lack the experience in dealing with the public themselves, they are intelligent enough to utilize the services of advisers who are experienced. This is the case almost everywhere throughout the Roosevelt Administration and is one reason it continues to hold the confidence of the country.

Grand Coulee again.

Some Administration quarters are worried over the disrepute into which this dam project in Washington State has fallen.

It always was in bad odor among a number of New Dealers. For months around PWA noses were held whenever it was mentioned. Secretary Ickes had thumbs down on it. There was no market for the power and its alleged irrigation value would require settlement of the desert by 300,000 persons. However, Senator Dill, of Washington, now retiring, persuaded Mr. Roosevelt to go ahead with part of the dam, but leaving it only half high enough to be usable for irrigation. Grand Coulee fell into more disfavor when President Roosevelt stopped to inspect it on his return from his Pacific cruise last summer, though he put up a bold front about it. Mrs. Roosevelt remarked cryptically that Senator Dill certainly was a good salesman. Secretary Ickes tagged along in the party, dour and silent as he viewed the monumental excavations in the lonely sagebrush desert.

This sort of thing can't go on giving a black eye to other large and more useful projects, so the public apparently is going to have Grand Coulee "sold" to it by high-pressure publicity propaganda.

Dr. Meade's Request.

Dr. Elwood Mead, United States Commissioner of Reclamation, and in charge of the project, has written to Neale Jones, field publicity director of the Grand Coulee project, asking for suggestions as to how to "educate" the East. This letter was not supposed to be published.

"We have before us now the problem to overcome the skepticism of the East," Dr. Meade wrote to the Grand Coulee press agent. "Nearly every article which appears in the Eastern press deals with Grand Coulee as without economic justification. It is the target of more criticism than Bonneville (Bonneville Dam near Portland, Oreg.). None of it is based on a knowledge of condition or an attempt to understand them, further than to deal with it as wholly a power development. I should like to have your views as to how the East can be properly informed."

The Postoffice Department reports a surplus of $12,000,000 for the last fiscal year, a feat never equaled in the entire history of the postal service except during one war year. Postal revenues continue to increase, indicating a larger margin in black ink at the end of the current year.

That ought to make it possible for the department to do something to humanize its own labor policy and ease up on economies which are obtained by the stretch-out and speed-up and by underpaying substitute postal workers, many of whom are on relief rolls because of their starvation earnings.

30-Hour Week Is Attacked In New Blast by Chamber week as the chamber is in opposition to it.

The federation sees in the 30-hour week a means of spreading out work and giving jobs to millions of unemployed. The chamber, as was made clear yesterday, takes an entirely different view of the proposal.

Notwithstanding these differences and the obstacles that stand in the way of cooperation between the two organizations, both at least agree that the time has arrived for a big push toward prosperity.

Labor Sees Improvement.

Yesterday's statement by the American Federation of Labor on industrial conditions came in the wake of a remark Saturday by Henry I. Harriman, president of the Chamber of Commerce, that "business is rarin' to go."

Said the report of the Federation of Labor:

"The business world is in a better position to go ahead than at this time last year. Bank deposits have increased at an unprecedented rate and are now 29.7 per cent above March, 1933; business men could finance a major production increase by drawing on their accounts, with very little recourse to loans—an unusually strong position.

"Buying power of workers and farmers is higher than it was at this time last year. Debts are being paid off, bills met more promptly. Department store sales in October were 11 per cent above last year, sales of chain stores 20.6 per cent higher."

Need for increased purchasing power was stressed.

"In September," the report said, "we had 10,951,000 without work in industry. Business has devised no plan to give these men and women their normal jobs in productive work.

"The strong wine of business optimism may stimulate industry to action again, but production and employment can not go on increasing unless a steady increase in workers' buying power creates a growing market for goods.

"Wage increases can be paid for by increasing production and reducing unit operating cos's instead of increasing prices. One of the chief reasons for high unit costs of manufacture today is the low level of production at which our plants are now running, particularly in the heavy industries, and the large amount of idle plant capacity which must be supported.

Idle Plants Held Drags.

"Idle plants and machinery represent investment on which interest must be paid; they also require certain expenses for repair and upkeep. When this machinery is in use producing goods it pays its own upkeep.

The committee on manufacture of the Chamber of Commerce cited nine counts against the 30-hour week plan, among them the following:

"A uniform 30-hour week (or restrictions on working time for separate industries that would result in an average work-week approximating 30 hours) would establish a barrier to any substantial expansion in the volume of business in the near future.

"Adjustments already made in hours and wages by means of NRA code provisions and by voluntary action of employers have caused divergent results on volume of production and employment. Any requirement for further curtailment in working hours would intensify the problem now confronting business executives of adjusting operations to present economic conditions.

"To produce a maximum volume of business and employment, hour and wage standards must be suited to the requirements of each enterprise. Accordingly, such standards must be flexible enough to meet the needs of individual enterprises within an industry as well as the needs of diverse industries. Inflexible restrictions on employes' working time throughout all fields of business would result in lessened production, contraction in trade and lower standards of living for the working population.

"Moderate reductions in hours, with proportionate reductions in weekly earnings of employes, may constitute effective expedients for minimizing unemployment when volume of business is declining. If carried to extremes, curtailment in working time may prolong a depression.

"Production Endangered."

"The limitations on total output resulting from any substantial shortening of working hours can not be counteracted by increasing wage rates. Any general advance in wage rates and in employes' earnings would be justifiable only if preceded or accompanied by an equivalent increase in productivity.

"Increased costs of operation can be recovered only by increasing prices or by decreasing profits. Consumer resistance to higher prices reduces the demand for goods. A large segment of industry and trade is now operating at a loss and will continue to do so until the barriers to profitable operation are removed. Further reductions in working time with upward adjustments in wage rates would intensify present maladjustments in price relationships and bring about a decline in total volume of business.

"Plants operating at a relatively high rate of capacity would be hampered by being required to reduce working hours of their present employes to employ additional help. Efficiency would be reduced, uneconomic additions to plants might be forced, and business might be driven to inefficient establishments with a subsequent loss in total volume of production.

"Continuation of code processes for permitting each industry to solve its own problems of wage and hour adjustments should be depended upon as the most appropriate means for dealing with the subject. Consideration of further experimental measures to regulate hours and wages should be deferred until conclusive evidence is available that the means now at hand are inadequate or unsuitable."

Solon Sees Prosperity In 'Buy American' Plan

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—Senator Thomas D. Schall (Republican), Minnesota, in an open letter to President Roosevelt released here today, declared that the United States should embark on a program of "Buy American" to insure an early return of prosperity.

"The worker must be the consumer as well as the producer," the Senator said. "He must be compelled to consume and use only those products produced by other workers in the United States."

Former Ickes Associate Found Slain in Chicago

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—The rain-soaked body of Charles Frank Spearin, 59, a real estate agent, was found today in a back yard far from his home. He had been slain, apparently by robbers.

Spearin formerly worked as a reporter, his widow said, on the old Chicago Record at the time Harold L. Ickes, now Secretary of Interior, and Frederic William Wile, now connected with the Columbia Broadcasting System in Washington, also were employed on the paper.

Economy Unit Demands U. S. Even Budget

Urges Billion in New Taxes and a Reduction of Public Works.

A plan for balancing the Federal budget in the fiscal year 1936, beginning July 1, is outlined in a petition sent to President Roosevelt and members of Congress by the National Economy League.

The principal features of the plan are:

1. A sharp curtailment in Federal expenditures for emergency purposes, particularly Public Works projects.

2. New Federal taxes designed to raise nearly $1,000,000,000.

If no new schemes for spending Federal money are adopted, the Economy League said, the budget under this plan ought to be balanced at the figure of $5,435,000,000.

Only by balancing the budget, the league said, can confidence in the Government be restored and real business recovery achieved.

New Revenue Proposed.

The Economy League, which has been accused of trying to help its 250,000 members escape taxation, answered this accusation by proposing nearly $1,000,000,000 in new taxes. In this connection, the petition said:

"We do not at this time suggest specific means of raising new revenues for we believe this question to be the function of the Congress, which meets in January. We affirm, however, the willingness and ability of the American people to pay the required additional taxes, provided they are convinced that the new taxation will be accompanied with a reduction in expenses and will result in a truly balanced budget and the dissipation of the existing threat to the welfare of all."

The league proposes that no more money be appropriated for the Public Works Administration. However, in its balanced budget, the league allows an item of $1,000,000,000 to continue projects already started, and, in a footnote, suggests another item of $500,000,000 for the same purpose in the fiscal year of 1937. These two items, the league says, will be available in the PWA balance after the present fiscal year.

Would Cut CCC Funds.

The expenditures of the Federal Relief Administration and allied units, which the league says will reach $1,250,000,000 this year, would be reduced to $1,000,000,000 in the next fiscal year, and the States would be asked to bear a larger share of the relief burden.

The Civilian Conservation Corps, which the league says has been spending at the rate of $400,000,000 a year, would be reduced to an allowance of $350,000,000 in 1936.

In making public the petition, Maj. Henry H. Curran, director of the Economy League, said:

"In 1928 nearly everybody said the prohibition amendment could not be repealed—but it was done. In 1932 nearly everybody said that pensions to veterans who were not hurt by the war could not be eliminated—but it was done, to the extent of an annual saving of over $300,000,000 to the taxpayers.

Criticizes Public Works.

"Now the same thing is said of our insistence that the national budget must be balanced—but it can be done. If it is not done we shall have to resign ourselves to the fact that real recovery is still far away."

Maj. Curran conceded that direct relief to the unemployed who needed it was necessary, but he opposed any further expansion of the public works program, saying:

"As a remedy for unemployment, public works are too expensive, too slow, too specialized and too superfluous in themselves. We do not need all these new postoffices, roads and dams. The cost of them is so enormous that if it is continued it will ultimately wreck the margin of financial safety that our Government still enjoys."

Owner Control Of Corporate Units Studied

Ways of Giving Power to Stockholders Sought by SEC.

(Associated Press.)

Ways of giving stockholders rather than managers greater control over business corporations are being considered by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Heretofore, many men who actually ran a business have been obtaining proxies from hundreds and even thousands of stockholders and voting for the stockholders on questions of important policy. In some cases, stockholders were not advised, or did not inquire, what problems were to be voted upon.

But yesterday it appeared the Securities Exchange Commissoin was at least thinking of requiring that the stockholders know what they are being asked to vote on.

Study Situation.

A. A. Berle and Gardiner Means have been studying the situation to ascertain the extent of management control. And making clear that the commission's consideration is earnest, Commissioner James M. Landis had this to say in a recent speech:

"If we are to revive our faith in the older idea of the corporation as a business entity which sought to give its stockholders the right by virtue of their investment to participate in the policies of the management, we must succeed in dealing with this problem.

"The way in which stoskholders have been induced to ratify particular management policies without even a disclosure of what these policies are, is well known to almost every holder of a voting security.

"Stockholders' conduct in the large has been unintelligent, in its appraisal of management. It could not be otherwise so long as stockholders were kept in ignorance of what management was seeking permission to do.

"Means must be found not only to bring about a disclosure of what stockholders are asked to vote upon, but to simplify corporate problems for judgment by them, if their rights under the existing conception of a corporation are to be enjoyed."

Giant Organization Adopts Pension Plan

New York, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Old age retirement income was assured today to the thousands of employes of General Foods Corporation, a $61,000,000 industrial organization with 46 plants and 29 sales divisions located throughout the United States.

Under a new cooperative annuity plan announced by C. M. Chester, president, joint contributions by the corporation and employes will provide fixed monthly incomes for employes when they reach retirement age—60 for women and 65 for men. The company will pay more than half of the total cost.

Huey Will Run For President With 3d Party

Has Anti-Roosevelt Plank; Scouts G. O. P. Danger in '36 Election.

Baton Rouge, La., Nov. 18 (AP).—Huey Long plans to run for the Presidency in 1936 on a third party ticket.

The Senator from Louisiana regards himself as the "kind of President this country needs" and hopes to sweep himself into the White House on an anti-Roosevelt platform.

Convinced that President Roosevelt's popularity can not survive for two more years, Long is laying the groundwork for his campaign in Louisiana now.

He hopes to perfect a model government in his native State that he can take before the Nation as an example of what he would do with the National Administration.

He does not give serious consideration to the probability of the Republicans returning to power in 1936.

He is equally undismayed by the failure of third-party movements in the past, notably those of Theodore Roosevelt and fighting Bob La Follette.

"Ah, that's nothing," the Kingfish said. "Times have changed. This new crop of voters wants a government for the plain people. Why, the Republican party was a third party. When that was organized the Whig and Democratic parties were the main parties."

Huey regards his special session of the Legislature, when he had 44 bills passed in less time than it would take to read the texts, as just another move toward realization of his Presidential ambitions.

Long's political play is to the young voter.

"I don't care nothing about the old fogies and mossbacks," he said. "I am for the plain, honest, thinking man and the generations that are coming."

He feels that the student body of Louisiana State University, his particular pride and joy, is with him almost to a man and he hopes it is indicative of other student bodies throughout the country.

They, as Long points out, will be the voters in 1936.

Los Angeles, Nov. 18 (AP).—Lee Mantle, 83, former United States Senator from Montana, died at his home here today from a heart attack.

A contemporary of Marcus Daly and W. A. Clark in Montana's copper mining, Mantle held extensive interests there and in Arizona. He was elected to the Senate in 1895 after serving as Mayor of Butte.

Midget Prisoner Is Great Problem To Joliet Warden

Joliet, Ill., Nov. 18 (AP).—Albert Testa, 26, may be small, but today he created more problems for Warden Frank D. Whipp of the State penitentiary than a whole cell block of ordinary prisoners.

Testa is a midget—51 inches tall and weighs only 74 pounds. He came here last week from Chicago to serve a year on a criminal assault charge.

They put him in a cell—the bars were close enough together that he couldn't slip through—and their problems started. There wasn't a prison uniform small enough to fit him. So one is being made. Small size shoes and socks had to be obtained for him, as well as high chair on which to eat his meals.

Testa said he was going out for prison football. He wants to be mascot.

Peer and Ex-'M. P.' Expelled in Spain

Listowell, Ellen Wilkinson Complain of Treatment.

London, Nov. 18 (AP).—Lord Listowell and Miss Ellen Wilkinson, former member of Parliament, revealed today they were "virtually kidnaped" and run out of Spain by military authorities when they went there seeking information about the recent Spanish revolt. After visiting the capital they went to Asturias Province.

"It was when we got to Oviedo that the trouble began," said Miss Wilkinson on reaching London today. "As a matter of fact we were virtually kidnaped and driven in a car for 17 hours to the frontier."

Lord Listowell and Miss Wilkinson went to Spain under the auspices of the relief committee for the victims of fascism to investigate needs for relief there.

Du Pont Urges Strict Control Of Arms Trade

Ban Excessive Profits in War Time, Letter to Nye Advises.

Wilmington, Del., Nov. 13 (AP).—A thorough and detailed study of the munitions problem to eliminate excessive profits in war time was urged today by Lammot du Pont, president of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., in a letter to Senator Gerald P. Nye, chairman of the Senate Munitions Investigating Committee.

The manufacturer said he would not "venture to express an opinion" on the advisability of eliminating international trade in arms, but advocated such trade be subjected "to strict Government control, preferably by international agreement."

Du Pont declared that the Government in formulating its policies must always take into consideration two improtant facts to guarantee its own continued existence.

These are, he said:

"Adequate national defense must be insured.

"The maintenance of peace must be encouraged and fostered."

"No prudent nation can afford to be unarmed in the world today," Du Pont wrote Senator Nye. "Since the war, Government arsenals, although operating at only one-tenth of their capacities, have been supplying about 95 per cent of Army ordnance, private manufacturers only 5 per cent."

In war time the Government is able to produce only 5 per cent of the munitions needed, Du Pont continued.

Referring to the elimination of international trade in arms, he said:

"Rather we feel that the international trade in arms should be subjected to strict Government control, preferably by international agreement. At any rate the United States can immediately initiate its own policies in this respect.

"We suggest legislation permitting the export of arms from this country only on orders by a Federal Government bureau or commission as the Congress may determine."

Worcester Alumni To Hear Admiral

Naval Officer to Speak to Association Here.

Rear Admiral Ralph Earle, U. S. N. (retired), president of Worcester Polytechnc Institute, will speak at a dinner of the Washington Chapter of the Worcester Alumni Association at the National Press Club tomorrow. John A. Remon, chairman of the chapter, will preside.

Holder of the Distinguished Service Medals of both the Navy and Army, a Companion of the Order of the Bath and commandeur of the Legion d'Honneur, Admiral Earle is well known in Washington, having been chief of the Bureau of Ordnance from 1916 until 1920.

Two of his outstanding achievements during the World War were the devising and laying of the mines in the North Sea and the planning and placing of 14-inch naval batteries along the western front.

A native of Worcester, Mass., Admiral Earle is the son of the noted architect, Stephen C. Earle, who designed the first buildings of Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

sumably the United States and Brazil.

The commission is to determine what measures will be taken to insure and maintain cessation of hostilities in accordance with certain rules. Paraguay and Bolivia would order their troops to cease all hostilities within a period of six days from the date on which the secretary-general of the league notifies them that the recommendations of the assembly have been accepted by both parties.

Within ten days from the cessation of hostilities the two armies facing one another would bring their advance lines back toward the main bodies for at least 50 kilometers from the front, and so create a neutral zone at least 100 kilometers in width.

Within this zone the two armies are ordered to abstain from establishing any works of an offensive or defensive character.

Argentina Guards Gran Chaco Border

Buenos Aires, Nov. 18 (AP).—Reports from Asuncion today indicated that victorious Paraguayan forces were consolidating the sweeping gains made yesterday in the Bolivan sector of the Gran Chaco, where they claimed the capture of Fort Ballivian and 10,000 prisoners.

The Argentine government meanwhile was taking strict precautions on the Chaco frontier, where it was indicated at the ministry of war that the billigerent forces were perilously close to the Argentine border.

Additional Argentine contingents and an airplane squadron were sent to reinforce border garrisons at Las Lomitas and the territory of Formasa, with strict orders to disarm and intern any foreign soldiers who may enter Argentine territory.

Extension of Sales Tax Urged on Legislature

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—Legislators converged on Springfield, Ill., tonight at the call of Gov. Henry Horner, who ordered a special session of the Legislature tomorrow to consider extension indefinitely of the 2 per cent State sales tax, effective for the last year.

The Governor hoped for swift approval of the measure, similar to the one now in effect which replaces State property taxes. State officials said during the period it had raised nearly $38,000,000.

Japan Expected To End Treaty In December

Abrogation of Navy Pact to Be Conciliatory, Report Says.

(Copyright, 1934, by United Press.)

London, Nov. 18.—Private advices from Tokyo tonight said that Japan was preparing to denounce the Washington Treaty of 1922 early in December.

The pact, which established the 5-5-3 naval strength ratio among Great Britain, the United States and Japan, placed the Japanese on the short end of the apportionment. The Japanese dispatches indicated again that Tokyo is in no mood to withdraw her demand for naval equality, and that despite compromise efforts by the British is ready to proceed alone in abrogating the Washington pact.

The United States delegation, expecting some such move momentarily since the preliminary conversations began here in October, were noncommittal on the latest reports. They remained committed to opposition to Japanese naval equality, however, and to the support of the Washington and London treaties, which they admitted could be revised but which they hoped to see remain in force in somewhat the same shape as at present.

The advices tonight added that the Japanese government will issue a proclamation simultaneously with the denunciation of the Washington Treaty, deprecating a naval race among the three major powers, urging continued cooperation for peace in the Pacific and the world in general, and hoping that the world naval conference will be held next year.

It was indicated that this proposed pronouncement would be couched in terms similar to those used when Japan withdrew from the League of Nations. Her notice of withdrawal becomes effective in February, when the two years' notice period elapses.

Despite hints that this document also would be conciliatory in tone, it was believed generally it would hardly seek to veil Tokyo's apparent intention to proceed with her naval plans with or without the approval of Washington and the British. In view of this, observers found little reason to hope that the wish Tokyo may express for the convening of the 1935 formal naval parley will be sustained by the other powers.

The preliminary conversations have made little, if any headway, going the way of most conferences on arms and economic subjects in the last two years—and none desires to proceed with what many are rapidly coming to consider a hopeless cause to reach a naval understanding.

Prime Minster J. Ramsay MacDonald, during the week-end, continued efforts to induce Norman H. Davis and the United States delegation to adopt a middle course in spite of Japan's bid for naval equality and supremacy in the Far East. However, opinion in England appeared swinging toward Britan's seeking a closer understanding with the United States as the bulwark against Japanese "imperialism."

Washington Post Toy Fund Starts Its Mission of Joy

4 Daughters of Sen. Davis Among First to Offer Their Services.

The 1934 Washington Post Toy Fund got off with a flying start yesterday when it recruited again in its ranks of Santa Claus aids, the four "Js," daughters of Senator and Mrs. James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania and their friends and companions, the four daughters of Representative and Mrs. Clyde Kelly, of the same State.

Last year this octet of official girls gave yeomen service to The Post Toy Fund. They are certain to devise some clever and original ways of helping it again this Yuletide. The Davis girls, for instance, made Christmas calendars from Christmas cards, sold them and donated the proceeds to The Post Toy Fund and the "four Kellys" put on a candy sale for the same purpose with splendid financial results.

Jane Davis, 14, who goes to the National Cathedral School for Girls and her sisters Jean, Joan and Jewel have the true spirit of Christmas. They believe in sharing their good fortune with other children less fortunate than themselves and in this purpose they are encouraged and supported by Senator and Mrs. Davis.

Clyde, the youngest of the group of daughters of Representative and Mrs. Kelly, spoke for the quartet yesterday when she was told they were being enlisted again as Toy Fund aids. "I am sure we will be glad to help," she exclaimed, "and I will tell Ruth, Mary Jane and Hilda all about it. It is such fun to know that you can help to bring a Merry Christmas to boys and girls who might otherwise be without toys on Christmas Eve."

Many Eager to Help.

Laird Kiltie of Tweburn, mascot of the Pets Corner of The Junior Post, gave the first donation of $1 and Washington started yesterday to make the 1934 Post Toy Fund a real success. Telephone calls throughout the day to the managers of the Fund showed that the people of the city are ready and eager to help The Post Toy Fund in its task of seeing that no needy child goes without a toy at Christmas time this year.

Offers of service, toys and promise of money gifts gave a flying start to the drive that must go over the top 100 per cent strong by Christmas Eve. At the present headquarters of the Toy Fund in The Post Building its directors set as their first achievement the passing of the first $100 mark by Thanksgiving eve.

The Junior Post editor was one of the first callers to leave her personal donation of $1 with the cheering news that she was going to rally the thousands of boys and girls in the city who read The Junior Post every Sunday and write for its columns to do their bit for The Post Toy Fund.

More on Relief Rolls.

With thousands more families on the relief rolls than last year, the need to augment the toy and doll stores of Santa Claus is most apparent, and from a number of agencies dealing with these social welfare matters have come grateful assurances of their appreciation of the purposes behind the 1934 Washington Toy Fund.

Of course, none of the funds allotted for relief or social welfare needs can be used for toys, so with The Post Toy Fund and kindred ones in the city these workers among the needy families of the city would be quite at their wits' end to devise the ways and means for a merry Christmas for the children under their charge.

Washington mothers are urged to sort over their children's toys and contribute those they feel they can discard to The Post Toy Fund. The toys needing repair will be renovated and make some child's heart glad at Christmas time. Toys and gifts can be left at The Washington Post Building for the present. Headquarters will be established elsewhere in a short time, where the toys donated will be on display.

Miss Roche's Rule May Mean Ouster Of Dr. Cumming

Appointment of Miss Josephine Roche, welfare worker formerly of the Children's Bureau, as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in charge of public health, was authoritatively interpreted yesterday as a policy upset strong enough to indicate a new surgeon general, according to the Associated Press.

Conjecture was it would prove a forerunner to the resignation of Surgeon General Hugh S. Cumming, public health chief under five Presidents. Dr. Cumming is now in South America attending a sanitary conference, and will not return to the Capital until late in December.

Predictions were made that by the first of the year his place would be taken by Dr. Thomas Parran, New York State health officer, who was prominent in security conference deliberations here last week and who worked closely with Franklin D. Roosevelt when he was Governor of New York.

These predictions were partially based on the fact that Dr. Cumming belongs to a different school of thought from Miss Roche on public health matters.

Austrian Chemist Dead From Internal Burns

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—Internal burns, suffered when he inhaled hydrochloric acid vapor during an experiment Thursday in a Gary, Ind., chemical laboratory, today caused the death in a hospital of Dr. Eric von Gebauer-Fulnegg, 33, well-known chemist.

Gebauer-Fulnegg came to the United States in 1926, after receiving a doctor of philosophy degree from the University of Vienna, and spent two years on the Princeton University faculty before transferring to Northwestern University. A secialist in organic chemistry, he retained his post at Northwestern when he became consulting chemist at the laboratory in Gary last year.

Far Behind Quota, Chest Spurs Drive

terday was idle, taking a vacation forced by the closing of Federal and District offices Saturday. This unit is leading all other campaign divisions.

Leaders of the unit, which is headed by Maj. Gen. Frederick W. Coleman, chief of finance of the Army, added $35,451.29 from 5,883 contributors for a total of $475,251.45, or 83.3 per cent of its assigned quota, the latest reports showed.

The special gifts unit, led by Charles Carroll Morgan, turned in $33,919, bringing its total to date to 75.4 per cent of its $501,000 quota. It was this unit which on Friday shattered Community Chest records for all time with a one-day total of $115,864.18.

On a percentage basis the special gifts group was forced to concede a fractional lead to the Capital Unit, which has reported a total of $3,249.24, or 75.59 per cent of its quota of $4,299.24. This group was organized to solicit contributions from colored residents not reached by any of the regular units.

The Metropolitan Unit, under the leadership of Joseph D. Kaufman, found 663 new givers for a total of $14,535.45 and a grand total of $115,297.94, or 44.84 per cent of quota.

The Group Solicitation Unit, in charge of Walter B. Clarkson, went up to 47.9 per cent in its quota when new contributions of $17,344.26 raised its total to $146,628.07.

Before solicitors went to work yesterday, the total from all units was 66.76 per cent of quota, as compared to 50 per cent raised in the same time in last year's campaign.

Mr. Rust, Bernard Wichoff, vice chairman of the campaign committee, and the heads of the various drive units will take part in a Community Chest radio program on Station WMAL at 9 o'clock tonight.

Church Fight On Nazi Rules Still Raging

Protestant Dissension Far From Ended by Hitler Concessions.

Berlin, Nov. 18 (AP).—The dictum of Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler giving both camps of the Protestant church virtually a free hand to "fight it out between themselves" was viewed today as barren of good results.

Followers of Reichbishop Ludwig Mueller and members of the confessional synod are no nearer to an agreement. The former group remains in possession of the official machinery, enabling it to inflict disciplinary measures on recalcitrant pastors.

The opposition, far from showing any sign of surrender, defiantly welcomes persecution as the inevitable fate of the "true evangelical church under the cross."

Speakers at a meeting of the German Christian pastors Friday admitted the situation is "far from satisfactory." They maintained they had shown a far more conciliatory spirit than the opposition and lamented that "on both sides the pastors are making each other's lives miserable."

New church legislation making it impossible to bridge differences is reported in the course of preparation by Mueller's new legal expert, Dr. Christian Kinder, and a public meeting has been called for tomorrow night at Berlin's sports palace. Mueller and Kinder are expected ot disclose their legislative plans.

The Nazi claim to "totality," or exclusive dictatorial rule in every domain of German life, encountered an insuperable obstacle in the confessional synod. Faced with the dilemma of suffering loss of prestige, or risking the political defection of large groups of peasants in Bavaria and Wurttemberg by continuing the policy of attempting to compel church unity, Der Fuehrer chose the loss of prestige. He received three opposition bishops, Hans Meister, of Bavaria; Theophil Wurm, of Wurttemberg, and August Marahrens, of Hanover, and told them his party and the nation no longer had any interest in the church fight.

Elevator Operators Threaten Strike in N. Y.

New York, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—New York building operators tonight made last-minute concessions in an effort to avert a strike of thousands of elevator workers in the metropolis.

It was understood the strike was scheduled to start tomorrow morning, and that upward of 40,000 men would answer the first call, crippling elevator service in the financial district and in selected uptown areas—probably including aristocratic Park avenue.

Texans Hunt Young Killers

Joe Averitt and Roy Curry Sought for Murder and Kidnapings.

Waco, Tex., Nov. 18 (AP).—Joe Averitt, 23, and Roy Curry, 26, of Hubbard, were hunted on murder charges tonight in the slaying of James Malcolm Stewart, 25-year-old dramatics student, at the start of a 12-hour orgy of crime.

The hunt for the young gunmen, who terrorized a wide section of central Texas yesterday, centered near Munger, where they were reported to have been seen about noon.

Officers said Averitt and Curry were identified by H. L. Reynolds, a filling station operator near Hubbard, at whose station the two young men and three kidnap victims stopped yesterday afternoon. Reynolds said he was a neighbor of the two.

Reynolds identified in the sheriff's office here Harry Richards, Roy McWhorter and Mrs. Lucien Davis as the persons Averitt and Curry had in their car. Those three were among the five persons two motorists kidnaped after Stewart was slain. All the victims were released last night.

Stewart's body was found in a country lane yesterday afternoon. Officers believed he was slain when he resisted the men's efforts to steal his car.

Heap Big Brave Just Squaw Man Around Wigwam

Shawnee, Okla., Nov. 18 (AP).—The ancient redman, an embodiment of Mars and nimrod in the field, was just "young-man-afraid-of-his-wife" when the day's fighting and hunting were over.

You have this from Bill Penny, of Shawnee, who says he spent 30 years among the Indians of the West and now rises to refute the time-hallowed theory that the Indian braves of pioneer days were absolute masters of their home tepees and loafed while forcing their wives to work.

"Did you ever see a picture of a brave smoking his war pipes inside the tepee?" he asked. "No, sir! He had to smoke 'em outside.

"I've lived among the Sioux, the Cheyennes, the Arapahoes, the Shawnees and a dozen other tribes and I know that the Indian women have always been the real heads of the families."

Banned Pamphlet Subject of Parley

CCC Director and Educator Will Discuss Books.

The fate of "You and Machines" in so far as the Nation's more than 350,000 CCC recruits are concerned, may be decided today at a conference between Robert Fechner and Dr. John W. Studebaker.

Dr. Studebaker, who is Commissioner of Education, said he plans to meet the CCC director and thresh out not only the problem of "You and Machines" but also the nine other educational pamphlets scheduled to succeed it. If the conference cannot be arranged for tomorrow, it will be held Tuesday.

Fechner last week ordered the pamphlet, written by Prof. William F. Ogburn of the University of Chicago, barred from distribution in forest camps because he deemed it "unsuitable." Its publication was made possible under a $40,000 Rockefeller grant to the American Council on Education.

'War to Finish' With Utilities, Says Roosevelt

TVA Plan Will Be Taken Up by Entire Nation, Valley City Told.

in the nature of a warning to public utilities to bring their rates in line with the Government "yardsticks" now being set up or else suffer the loss of their business. He envisages community power projects in all of the 48 States as a logical development to this end.

Only two years ago, Mr. Roosevelt told his audience, he saw things in the Tennessee Valley that "made the tears come to my eyes." The change since then has been more than physical; it has been in the spirit, too—"a something in people's faces, and I think you understand what I mean."

"People were wondering what was going to come to this country," he went on. "And yet today I see not only hope, but I see determination—knowledge that all is well with the country and that we are coming back."

Turning to the Tupelo power undertaking, which he said has increased monthly consumption from 41,000 to 89,000 kilowatt hours since March because of lowered rates, the President remarked that "various fairy tales" are being spread to the effect the Government's TVA "yardstick" receives too many favors.

In denying this, Mr. Roosevelt likewise assumed the defensive when he asserted that the public power movement does not spring from Washington, but from the communities themselves. "You are not being federalized," he declared, adding that this also does not mean regimentation. Instead, he coined a new phrase for it, "community rugged individualism."

Considers TVA a Success.

The President shed little light on how far the Government would go in fostering public operation of utilities, but it was clear from his whole-hearted indorsement of the TVA that other somewhat similar developments have a large place in his long-range economic program.

His speech was regarded as one of the most significant in recent months, indicating as it did that he considers public operation of power plants a proved success in the Tennessee Valley.

An indication of the conviction behind this belief came a few hours later when Mr. Roosevelt made a rear platform address at Birmingham. This was a frank appeal for "active cooperation" with the TVA, delivered in a territory where large coal interests are leading the fight against the Tennessee "experiment."

Points to Opposition.

"I am aware, of course, that a few of your citizenry are leaving no stone unturned to block and harass and to delay this great national program," he declared. "I am confident, however, that these obstructionists, few in number in comparison with the whole population, do not reflect the views of the overwhelming majority of the people of Birmingham or the other cities where they reside."

These militant remarks were regarded as expressing a new feeling on the part of Mr. Roosevelt. All along his trip down the Tennessee Valley en route to his "other home" at Warm Springs, Ga., he has evidenced a growing enthusiasm. This sentiment permeated the whole train. New Deal officials aboard, including Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, chairman of the TVA, made no effort to conceal their rejoicing.

A Forerunner to Action.

The whole trip, hence, was considered a forerunner to vigorous action by Mr. Roosevelt in the coming session of Congress. He is taking with him to Warm Springs a mass of reports, from which he is expected to select his program during the next three weeks. In it will be substantial sums for public works and a new relief proposal to provide jobs, in place of the present hand-out system.

Mr. Roosevelt's visit to Tupelo was the last phase of a tour that included Norris Dam, where an immense quantity of water will be stored, and Wheeler and Wilson Dams, which are chiefly generating plants. Tupelo represented, therefore, the ultimate objective of the whole system.

In a memorandum to the President, TVA Director David E. Lilienthal reported that electricity rates have been cut from an average of 7 cents per kilowatt—when the distributing system was owned by the Mississippi Power Co.—to a present average of 2.5 cents and less. Beginning at 3 cents, the charges range downward to 4 mills, all about 50 per cent below former rates.

Cites Rate Reduction.

"The experience which Tupelo has had under TVA rates," said Mr. Lilienthal, "illustrates how electric utilities can drastically reduce their rates, increase consumption and continue to prosper. Gross revenues were only $5,500 when the TVA program was just getting under way. By September, revenues had increased to more than $8,800, an increase of 57 per cent in only six months."

Applying the TVA rates as a "yardstick" to the whole Nation, he estimated that residential consumers would save $187,000,000 annually while almost doubling their use of electricity. It is as a "yardstick" that the TVA is mainly debated, private interests charging that it is more of a "blackjack." The TVA denies, however, that all proper charges are not made in figuring its rates.

During his visit to Tupelo, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt inspected a subsistence homestead several miles from town. They then drove to a hillside, behind a high school building, where the Chief Executive addressed some 25,000 people. On the platform with him were Senator Pat Harrison, Representative John E. Rankin, Senator-elect Theodore Bilbo, Secretary of the Interior Ickes, and others.

suffered deep cuts on the head and hands; Miss Winne Fairfax, 19, sprained ankle, cuts on the legs; Miss Louise Beach, 18, head cuts, and Luther Price, 28, head cuts, are those injured. All were in Mr. Gheen's car and are from Falls Church. Mr. and Mrs. Gheen and the child are in Georgetown Hospital.

When his car failed to take a turn at Harvard street and Adams Mill road last night and crashed into a tree, Ray W. Granson, 35, of 3315 Quesada street northwest, suffered cuts on the head and face. He and his wife, Mrs. Nell Granson, who received a broken collarbone and a broken nose, were taken to Garfield Hospital, where Mrs. Granson's condition was diagnosed as serious.

Fourteen-year-old Julia Harris, of 652 Newton place northwest, running across the street at 3501 New Hampshire avenue northwest last night, ran into a taxicab operated by David B. Coates, 534 Shepard street northwest. She was treated at Garfield Hospital for a fracture of the upper jaw.

Lewis Watkins, 57, colored, of 733 Fifth street southeast, a passenger in a car driven by Nelson Ross, 24, colored, of 311 L street southeast, suffered a fractured skull when his head was thrown against the windshield as Ross' car collided with another machine. Ross was unhurt. Watkins was taken to Casualty Hospital.

Auto and Train Collide.

Three persons were injured, none seriously, early yesterday morning when an automobile ran into a Baltimore & Ohio Railroad freight train at the River road crossing near the Capitol Airport. The injured were:

The injured were removed by passers-by to the Bladensburg fire house where they were taken by the county rescue squad to Dr. Louis M. Jimal, Cottage City. After treatment they went to their home.

An accident in front of her home, 2807 Ontario road northwest, sent Baby Toloria Schintzel, 2½, to Garfield Hospital with cuts about the hands, and booked Emil Peterson on charges of reckless driving.

The baby's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Schintzel, had just parked their automobile and were getting out when another car coming north, said to have been driven by Peterson, grazed the child.

Police Place a Charge.

Two persons were injured in an auto collision near Forty-seventh street and Conduit road. One of them, Sylvester Gordon, 28, of 1300 Fox Hall road, was believed to be hurt internally, and police ordered Georgetown Hospital attaches to hold him to face a charge of driving while drunk.

Police said John M. Fister, 13, of 5400 Galena place northwest, received head lacerations in the same accident.

Arthur E. Kimball, 28, of Clarendon, Va., was cut on the face in an accident on the Virginia end of the Key Bridge. He was treated at Georgetown Hospital.

Miss Eva Lloyd, killed in the collision at Pennsylvania and Minnesota avenues southeast early yesterday was a native of Berryville, Va., and a graduate of the University of Richmond. She had been attending school in Washington and had been employed by The Washington Post for about four months. She previously had worked for the Washington Times.

Text of Roosevelt's Talks

Following is a stenographic report of President Roosevelt's speech at Tupelo, Miss., by the Associated Press:

Senator Harrison, Gov. Connor, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I would not make a speech to you today because we are assembled on this glorious Sunday morning more as neighbors than as anything else.

I have had a very wonderful three days and everywhere that I have gone the good people have come as neighbors to talk with me, and they have not come by the thousands—they have come literally by the acres.

This is the first time in my life that I have had the privilege of seeing this section of the State of Mississippi. Many, many years ago, when Pat Harrison and I were almost boys, I got acquainted with his stamping ground down on the gulf. Today I am especially glad to come into the northern part of the State.

Notes Change in People.

Two years ago, in 1932, during the campaign, and again in January, 1933, I came through Kentucky—through the Tennessee Valley—and what I saw on those trips—what I saw of human beings, made the tears come to my eyes. The great outstanding thing to me for these past three days has been the change in the looks of people's faces.

It has not been only a physical thing. It has not been the contrast between what was actually a scarcity of raiment two years ago or a lack of food two years ago—the contrast between that and better clothing and more food today—but it is something in people's faces, and I think you understand what I mean. There wasn't much hope in those days. People were wondering what was going to come to this country. And yet today I see not only hope, but I see determination—knowledge that all is well with the country and that we are coming back.

Sees Opposition Fading.

I suppose that you good people know a great deal more of the efforts that we have been making in regard to the work of the Tennessee Valley Authority than I do, because you have seen its application in your own counties and your own towns and your own homes, and, therefore, it will be like carrying coals to Newcastle for me to tell you about what has been done.

But perhaps in referring to it I can use you as a text—a text that may be useful to many other parts of the Nation, because people's eyes are upon you and because what you are doing here is going to be copied in every State of the Union before we get through.

We recognize that there will be a certain amount of—what shall I say?—rugged opposition to this development, but I think we recognize also that the opposition is fading as the weeks and the months go by, fading in the light of practical experience.

Power Consumption Grows.

I cite certain figures for the benefit of the gentlemen of the press, who have come hither from many climes. I am told that from March of this year, when you started using TVA power, the consumption of power for residential purposes has risen from 41,000 kilowatts to 89,000 kilowatts, an increase of 126 per cent. I understand that from the financial point of view, in spite of various fairy tales that have been spread in other parts of the country, your power system is still paying taxes to the municipality. That is worth remembering. Furthermore, that, as a whole, it is a remarkable business success.

I talk about those figures first because it has been so often wrongly alleged that this yardstick which we are using could not be applied to private business and because a Government yardstick receives so many favors, that it is left off from paying this and paying that and paying the other thing. Well, we are proving it in this Tennessee Valley that by using good business methods we can instruct a good many business men in the country.

For Greater Happiness.

And there is another side of it. I have forgotten the exact figures and I can't find them in this voluminous report at this moment, but the number of new refrigerators that have been put in—that means something besides just plain dollars and cents. That means a greater human happiness.

Electric cookstoves and all the other dozens of things which, when I was in the Navy—we used to call gadgets—are making it possible. All of us working together, to improve human life through the introduction of things that aren't especially new so far as invention is concerned, but things which are becoming more and more necessities in our American life in every part of the country.

And I have been interested this morning in seeing these new homesteads—not just the buildings, not just the land that they are on, not just the excellent landscaping of the trees among which those homes have been set, but especially the opportunities that those homes are giving to families to improve the standard of living.

It's Up to Communities.

And finally, my friends, there is one thing about all that you are doing here in Tupelo, that they are doing in Corinth, that they are doing in Athens, and Norris and the various other places where accomplishment can be seen today—aye, the most important thing of all, I think, is that it is being done by the communities themselves. This is not coming from Washington. It is coming from you. You are not being Federalized. We still believe in the community, and things are going to advance in this country exactly in proportion to the community effort. This is not regimentation—it is community rugged individualism. It means no longer the kind of rugged individualism that allows an individual to do this, that or the other thing that will hurt his neighbors. He is forbidden to do that from now on—and it is a mighty good thing. But he is going to be encouraged in every known way from the National Capitol and the State capital and the county seat to use that individualism in cooperating with his neighbor's individualism so that he and his neighbors may improve their lot in life.

Thrilled by Cooperation.

Yes, I have been thrilled by these three days—thrilled in the knowledge not only of practical accomplishment, but thrilled also in the belief—the deep-seated belief on my part—that the people of this Nation understand what we are trying to do, are cooperating with what we are trying to do and have made up their minds that we are going to do it.

And so, in saying "good bye" to you for a short time—because I am coming back—I ask all of you, throughout the length and breadth of the Tennessee Valley and those areas which form an economic portion of that valley—I ask you all to remember that the responsibility for success lies very largely with you—confident that you are going to give to the Nation an example which will be a benefit not only to yourselves, but to the whole 130,000,000 Americans in every part of the land.

President, at Birmingham, Urges Public Support of Valley Project

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 18 (AP).—The text of the remarks by President Roosevelt in his brief train stop today at Birmingham follows:

My visit through the Tennessee Valley region would be incomplete without a stop in Birmingham, brief as that visit must be at this time. I remember with great pleasure another visit, necessarily brief, in January, 1933, when as President-elect I had acquired some first-hand knowledge of the problems of Tennessee and northern Alabama.

I speak of Birmingham as being in the Tennessee region because, while I appreciate that you are located south of the Tennessee watershed, there are many economic and social relationship between this city and the great territory which lies north of you.

I know something also of the many difficulties under which you have been laboring in recent years. I well understand the problems of the heavy industries, such as iron, steel and coal—industries upon which you so largely depend. They are matters of the keenest concern to the whole Administration.

The great program of public works now in full swing calls for vast quantities of the iron and steel and other capital goods which this area produces.

Definite improvement has already made its appearance as it has in the coal industry. The success of the NRA coal code appears not only in the more orderly mining of coal, but also in the more steady employment and the bigger pay envelopes of the thousands of miners who were in sore straits before the Government acted.

But, of course, for you who live in the economic area of the Tennessee Valley, the Tennessee Valley Authority must continue to receive your growing interest as it receives the growing interest and approval of so many other communities. The whole project can succeed fully only if it has the wholehearted support and cooperation of the people of the area. I particularly bespeak of the people of Birmingham an active cooperation with the Tennessee Valley Authority.

I am aware, of course, that a few of your citizenry are leaving no stone unturned to block and harass and to deny this great national program. I am confident, however, that these obstructionsists, few in number in comparison with the whole population, do not reflect the views of the overwhelming majority of the people of Birmingham or the other cities where they reside. I know, too, that the overwhelming majority of your business men, big and little, are in hearty accord with the great undertaking of regional planning now being carried forward. They and you stand shoulder to shoulder with TVA—eager to carry forward the development of this region in which Birmingham plays so important a part.

It is good to be with you again and I am looking forward to a happy few weeks in my other home in the Southland.

Farley Lauds 'Horse Sense' Of President

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—A plea for party unity and an assurance that President Roosevelt will continue to use "good old-fashioned horse sense" despite attempts to swing him to the "left" or to the "right" were put before the Nation tonight by Postmaster General Farley.

In his first postelection speech, which was broadcast, the Democratic national committee chairman promised that the new Congress dominated by his party would live up to its responsibilities.

He brought into the open the fears some Democratic leaders have had that minorities might succeed in obtaining enough pre-Congress promises from Representatives to cause difficulties, for he said:

"Already the newly elected Congressmen are being solicited to sign pledges, more or less vague, which would enable these organizations to claim them as adherents and so make a showing of strength before or at the coming session.

Warns New Members.

"To these Congressmen-elect I would say that, in my opinion, a legislator who ties his own hands in regard to legislation on which he will vote is committing as great a sin as a juryman who goes into court pledged in advance to a particular verdict.

"His duty * * * is to keep his mind open, to preserve his freedom of judgment and his independence of thought, to the end that when he takes a position on any of the grave matters with which the coming Congress must deal he will vote as his conscience directs for the best interests of the people."

Farley conceded the Democratic majority would be "beset by enthusiasts who regard the New Deal as the opening for those extreme measures which we label socialistic or communistic" and "importuned by those who regard any departure from what has been done in the past as dangerous and unconstitutional radicalism," but added:

"I don't imagine that anybody is much worried over the idea that the President's good old-fashioned horse sense will be missing from the Administration's course in this situation.

"Yielded to None."

"There is no one less likely to overturn the apple cart than he. For nearly two years he has conducted the affairs of his office to the satisfaction of the people, he has been exposed at all times to the gales of conflicting opinion that will blow so fiercely about the coming Congress.

"The conservatives have clamored that he has abrogated to himself powers he should not have and that he was being swayed by theorists and economic visionaries. The liberals have been equally violent in their protests that he had stopped short in his policies and processes of what they deem the ideal government.

"He has listened to all of them but has yielded to none of them. He has kept his head and exercised his own wise judgment, based on years of experience in Government and with a full perception of the consequences of his exercise of the powers conferred on him by the last Congress.

Cooperation Seen As 2 Boards Meet

Reserve Board, including the new governor.

For some time past the advisory council, composed of banking leaders of the 12 Federal Reserve districts, has been in the attitude before the public of expressinf an orthodox resistance to much New Deal policy, if not purpose. On a few occasions recommendations of the council have been withheld at the instance of the former governor of the Reserve Board, Eugene R. Black.

On others, recommendations have been published giving the impression that the Administration and the advisory council were not only at loggerheads but were irreconcilably antagonistic. This feeling had been advanced because some of the most vehement opponents of the New Deal policy were known to have acted in close conjunction with the advisory council.

When the advisory council recently adopted a further set of recommendations, the Reserve Board, then without a governor, voted to refuse to accept them. This rebuff was without precedent and created a serious breach. Incidentally, the board's action served chiefly to advertise both the breach and the advisory council's dissenting opinions.

Effect of Elections.

As in the case of the rapprochement promoted between the bankers and the President during the annual convention here last month of the American Bankers Association, the purpose now is to heal a breach, to bring about a policy of cooperation, replacing the period of bitterness and brickbat throwing. In both instances, no abandonment of conviction or principles is implied on either side, but rather the adoption of a different approach to common problems.

Without doubt the elections have had their effect in confirming some leaders of the banking and business community in the opinion that they should change their attitude—not their convictions. Much the same theory underlies other manifestations of the cooperative viewpoint adopted by business, through the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

However, Mr. Roosevelt, the most responsible of his advisors, and the Reserve Board, including the new governor, all reflect the same view that cooperation is essential to recovery. Hence there exists, manifestly, a conciliatory spirit on both sides which does not mean either has "sold out" or has sacrificed convictions to expediency.

The advisory council, of which Walter W. Smith, of St. Louis, is president, and Walter Lichtenstein, of Chicago, secretary, is gathering here for its regular fall meetings. They will continue today and tomorrow. There is every probability that if any formal recommendations are adopted the council will give expression to the purpose to cooperate and close the breach which has been conspicuous for many months.

Pair Found Dead On Barren Island

"Man's body was found under skiff, and woman's who was dressed in some lingerie, was about 50 feet away. Some baby clothes were found but no body.

"Island is uninhabited and has no water. Dead seal was hacked up and appeared to have been used for food. Pole had been erected in lava crack, evidently as a signal. Woman appeared to have died last, as man's head had been covered with white coat and was lying on pile of clothes. There was some French money in papers near the man."

Capt. Hancock based his belief that the couple was the Wittmers, whose home was in Germany, on the letter found addressed to him.

Spending Curb Recommended To Government

Federal Finance Committee Holds Policy Would Aid Credit.

Sharp restriction of emergency spending in the next fiscal year to enable the Government to consolidate its financial position is recommended by the Federal finance committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in a report submitted last week to the chamber's board of directors meeting in a two-day session here.

The committee holds that such a policy would go far to maintain the integrity of the Nation's credit and currency and would contribute more to general confidence than any other action the Government might take.

The committee urges immediate formulation of plans looking to a balanced Federal budget at the earliest possible date. It recognizes, however, that difficulties stand in the way of securing a balance in the budget in the true sense in the next fiscal year. It realizes that emergency expenditures under existing authorizations will mature next year and that provision must be made for direct relief.

The suggestion is put forward by the committee that if the excess of revenues over ordinary expenditures would take care of existing commitments maturing next year, the deficit then should be limited to the amount of the direct relief expenditures. Such a deficit, the committee believes, could be covered by payments out of the large general fund balance and by the use of the net payments to the Treasury by the Government lending agencies.

In this way, the committee points out, it would not be necessary to increase the Government debt nor would additional taxes be necessary. The pegging of the debt at the amount reached June 30, next, would contribute to confidence, the committee says.

See the real "sure 'nuff" electric railroad system . . . six trains whizzing along all at once, even miniature copies of the streamlined train that broke all transcontinental railroad records.

And did you ever dream that wooden animals could perform such antics . . . look at the Hustler toy exhibit. Buck Rogers has sent us some of his famous 25th Century rocket ships, pistols and suits.

Goodness, how we are rambling . . . but then, we can not hope to tell you all about it. The only really satisfactory way is to come to the Woodward & Lothrop Toy Store and see for yourself.

Church Marks Its 200th Year November 25

Bishop Tucker to Preach at Homecoming Rites of Episcopalians.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 126-J.

Home-coming Day and the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the founding of the Falls Episcopal Church in Falls Church will be observed on Sunday, November 25, at Falls Church, Va. Bishop Harry St. George Tucker, of Richmond, will preach at the morning services at 11 a. m., in charge of the Rev. Malcolm Taylor, a resident of Falls Church, who is now with the College of Preachers at St. Alban's Cathedral, Washington.

The bicentennial program in the afternoon will be in charge of the former rector, the Rev. R. Allan Castleman, of Falls Church. The memorial address will be delivered by the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, secretary of the Virginia diocese, of Ashand, Va. Special music is to be furnished by the choir from All Saint's Episcopal Church in Chevy Chase, Md. Preparations for the program were started by the former rector, the Rev. Clarence Stewart McClellan, who was forced to resign several months ago on account of ill health. They have been carried forward by the vestry of the Falls Church under active direction of Senior Warden Charles Stewart.

First Church Built in 1734.

The first Falls Church on the present site was erected in 1734, though records indicate an earlier chapel in this neighborhood. The present brick structure was erected in 1768 at the time George Washington was a member of the vestry of Truro Parish and a member of its building committee in charge of plans and bids. Before the present church was erected the parish had been subdivided and Washington assigned to the southern division. During the War Between the States the building was used as a hospital. Rectors from Pohick Church in Mount Vernon District, Truro Church in Fairfax, Christ Church in Alexandria, all with historic relationships with the Falls Church Church, have been extended special invitations to participate.

Tower Attracts Attention.

The 90-foot steel tower which has been erected this past week in Falls Church in the rear of the home of Barnett Keith and from the top of which signal lights are to be seen flashing each night has attracted much interest.

The tower has been erected by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, which has a group of 36 men in the area surrounding Washington, making a triangulation survey. Twelve collapsible steel towers are being set up, mushroom fashion, in the metropolitan sections of Virginia and Maryland, on concrete forms, which will later serve as permanent markers for all local and Federal surveys and map making. The work is technically known as "fire order triangulation."

In order to avoid gaps and overlaps always found when independent local surveys are joined together, it is necessary that they should all originate from a common base. In the United States this base is furnished by the triangulation net of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, a net which is being extended so rapidly that within a few years no point will be more than 12 or 15 miles from a triangulation station, the latitude and longitude of which will be known.

Aids Property Owners.

All triangulation stations are available to private engineers and surveyors. Their use in tying in property lines is rapidly extending, for many property owners appreciate the value of having their property lines so delineated that they need not fear the loss of corner markers. The lines can always easily be rerun when tied in to a triangulation station.

The tower is in two distinct parts. The theodolite (high grade transit) is placed upon the inner tripod and the observer supported by a platform attached to the outer tower so that the observer's movements will not affect the theodolite. All measurements are made at night as atmospheric conditions are better then. A light keeper posted at each tower operates a specially constructed electric lamp powered by dry cell batteries with a small, but very intense beam. When the observer has completed his observations he signals the lightkeeper by dot and dash code where to show the light next.

Waynesboro to Buy Sewage Equipment

Waynesboro, Pa., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—The Borough of Waynesboro will advertise in the near future for bids for mechanical equipment and accessories necessary for the sanitary sewerage system disposal plant.

Cox Murals at Virginia University Recall History of Law School's Clark Memorial

Alumnus Gave Fine Hall to House Work of Artist He Encouraged.

Building Called One of Finest College Edifices in United States.

By Harry Haller.

When the University of Virginia convened for the present academic season, students and nonresident professors were as much surprised by the presence in the handsome Clark Memorial Hall of Allyn Cox's imposing murals as visitors to Charlottesville had been during the summer. Perhaps more so, because the university community had anticipated the coming of the murals for two years.

The final arrival of the murals at Virginia recalls an involved story. Allyn Cox, it seems, is an enterprising painter with a set of Chinese murals in the dining room of a Savannah dowager's home to his credit as well as the effort now on view at Virginia. He succeeded in interesting in his work a William Andrew Clark, jr., of the class of 1899 at the University of Virginia Law School. Several years ago Mr. Clark suggested that his Alma Mater might be interested in a gift of murals by Mr. Cox. Alma Mater replied that she would be very much interested if she had a building in which to house them.

Whether or not Mr. Clark built Clark Memorial Hall, which now houses Virginia's Law School as well as the murals, as a hall in which the work of Mr. Cox might be contained, is a matter of conjecture. Official Virginia declares that the encouragement of Mr. Cox in his art was merely a secondary issue in Mr. Clark's philanthropic gesture. But while it is certain that Mr. Clark knew as well as anyone what a vital role his excellently appointed building would play in the academic life of the State and of the Nation, it is also certain that his offer of a gift of murals preceded the gift of the building.

School Produced Great Men.

Whatever his motive, however, one of the foremost law schools of the country is contained in Clark Memorial Hall. With its attractive setting, its first-rate lecture and class rooms, its complete library facilities and its model moot court room, it is a worthy home for the venerable institution that has given to the world one President of the United States; six members of the Federal Cabinet and five of the Confederate; nine ambassadors and ministers to foreign courts; two justices of the Supreme Court of the United States; 13 Federal circuit and district judges; three Surgeons General of the United States; 34 United States Senators; 152 Congressmen; 20 chief justices of State Supreme Courts; 39 university and college presidents, and an uncounted number of puisne judges, professors, headmasters and members of State legislatures.

In solemn conclave on October 5, 1932, the Clark Memorial Hall, which bears the inscription, "This Building Was Erected by William Andrews Clark, LL.B., class of 1899, in loving memory of his wife Mabel Foster Clark, 1880-1903, and is dedicated to the faculty, alumni and students of the law school, University of Virginia, 1932," was dedicated.

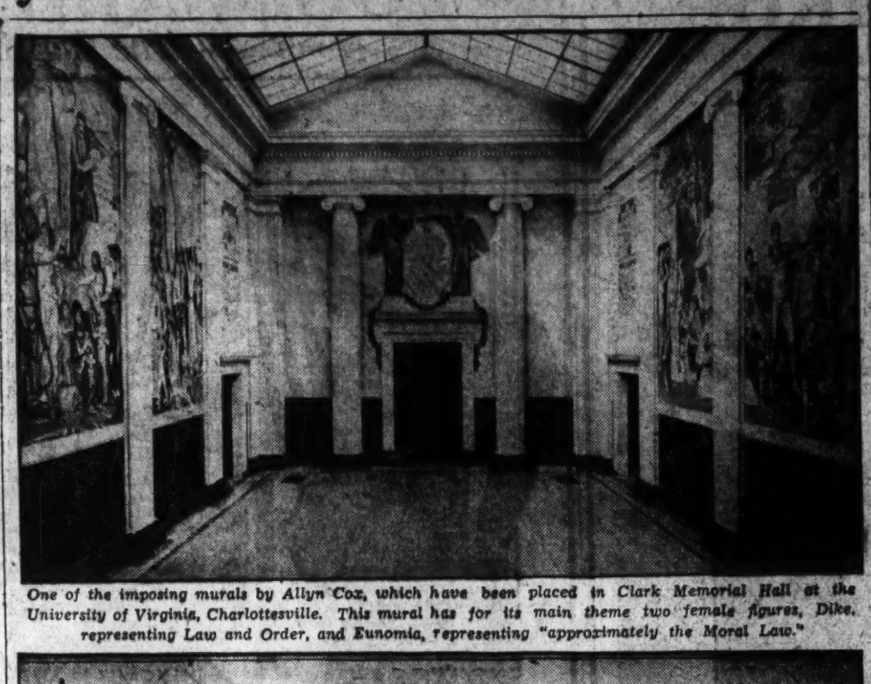
In presenting the building on behalf of Mr. Clark to the university, Judge Sydney Sanner, formerly of the Montana Supreme Court, said, "It is in every sense a memorial—the monument of a husband's love for his wife, long lost to him; of a father's love for their son, whose light expired in the forenoon of its day; of a student's pride in the Alma Mater whence came his most enduring inspirations. It is the expression of the personal ideals of a ripened scholar whose wish to be useful transcends the promise of his mortal life. It is an offering on the altar of patriotism—from the raw, creative West to the maturer culture of the East. It stands for all that is good and gracious in American feeling."

"Time does not permit me, in detail, to describe this lovely building," Armistead M. Dobie, present dean of law at the University of Virginia, said in accepting Clark Memorial Hall. "It is difficult for me to speak of it with proper restraint. Its lecture rooms are spacious and well equipped, its offices are commodious, even luxurious, the library and reading room are an unmixed joy, the student lounge would do credit to a metropolitan club. An eminent New York architect has declared it to be more completely in keeping with the Jeffersonian spirit than any building erected here since the death of the father of the university. To me, the beauty of Clark Memorial Hall is a happy blending of the romance of range and rotunda, the lure and lilt of the lawn and the halo of these happy hills. When Allyn Cox will have completed his mural paintings in the stately central hall, we shall have, I think, a room unmatched in any law building on the American continent."

Hall Waited Two Years.

For two years the "stately central hall" lay dormant, as, according to Mr. Clark's stipulation, it is to be put to no other use than that of exhibiting Mr. Cox's murals. Mr. Cox made a trip from New York to Virginia to confer with Dean Dobie and the faculty of the law school on the subject matter of the paintings. Dean Dobie knew he had conferred with Mr. Cox, but it was not until nearly two years later that he knew exactly what was going to be depicted on the walls of his central hall. The murals were finished last spring and exhibited in New York. They arrived at Charlottesville in June.

Since June the murals have aroused a great deal of discussion from both a legal and an artistic point of view. Some critics of art have called the panoramas plethoric, the figures blatant in coloring and pose and have cited distracting elements in the scenes depicted. Being the most conspicuous thing in the building, they are naturally supposed to be vitally significant in the development of law. Some authorities contend that in this they fail.



One of the imposing murals by Allyn Cox, which have been placed in Clark Memorial Hall at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville. This mural has for its main theme two female figures, Dike, representing Law and Order, and Eunomia, representing "approximately the Moral Law."

Another of the murals represents Moses delivering the Tablets of the Law to the Children of Israel. According to Mr. Cox, this mural, under the aegis of Eunomia, indicates "the idea of Eunomia, the law of the individual himself, that which is good for him to be."

The murals are located on the east and west walls of the large central hall. As the visitor enters he faces the south door, over which is the tablet of dedication, supported by two female, bronze-colored figures — Dike, representing law and order, and Eunomia, representing "approximately the moral law."

To the right on the west wall, three large panels depict the first reference to law and order found in literature. The scene is taken from the eighteenth book of Homer's "Iliad," in which the picture on Achilles' shield are described. The particular picture is a primitive trial, representing the law as a means of settling disputes. It is supposedly a development of the idea expressed by Dike. (According to Mr. Cox's conception of Homeric customs, the figures are conspicuously undressed.)

Moses Delivers Tablets.

On the east wall, under the aegis of Eunomia, the personification of the moral law, Mr. Cox has represented Moses delivering the tablets of the law to the children of Israel. "This indicates," he says, "the idea of Eunomia, the law of the individual himself, that which it is good for him to be."

Mr. Clark did not live to see the murals placed in Clark Memorial Hall and was never able to express gratification at his completely finished building. Others also keenly interested in the project, who had expected possibly an impressive representation of Roger Brooks Taney in trial on the Dred Scott case or John Marshall handing down a celebrated decision, were surprised — some pleasantly and some not so pleasantly.

Gasparri Dies Of Pneumonia; Jokes Till End

High Officials at Bedside of Cardinal Serving Under 3 Popes.

busiest lives ever recorded in the Church. He worked almost until the end. Wednesday afternoon he gave a long lecture on the history of codification of canon law before a world juridical congress, attended by several American delegates. He had worked for years on codification of canon law.

Overwork Reported.

He told his audience that some time ago, feeling weighed down by the immense work of codification and as an active church administrator for several generations, he wished to resign the cardinalate. He relinquished his duties as secretary of state to Cardinal Pacelli in 1930.

He said his friend and collaborator on codification of canon law, Father Wernz, had dissuaded him from resigning as cardinal.

While delivering his lecture the aged cardinal appeared to be in the best of health and in fine spirits. He laughed and talked with many delegates who presented their congratulations. He walked through the rain to his car after the lecture, and caught cold, followed Thursday morning by a high fever and an attack of bronchitis.

Given immediate medical care, he began to recover and on Friday seemed much better, although his ailment was diagnosed as influenza. Then pneumonia set in and the end came rapidly.

Cardinal Gasparri was a protector of the Scholastic Sisters of St. Francis, in Milwaukee, Wis.

Thousands of American former service men are still grateful to him because during the war he instituted the work of searching out and communicating with prisoners.

Sponsor of Peace.

Besides his great work in behalf of the church, Cardinal Gasparri was noted for his efforts in the cause of universal peace—in the church and among the nations of the world.

Immediately upon assuming his duties as papal secretary of state, a little more than two months after the outbreak of the World War, he joined Pope Benedict XV in an attempt to terminate the conflict.

Foreseeing the great slaughter of humans and the devastation of property with so many nations involved in the war, Cardinal Gasparri, with the approval of the holy father, carried on diplomatic negotiations with the various governments, but to no avail. The failure of the Vatican's move and the prolongation of the war caused the pontiff such grief that it was ascribed as an indirect cause of his death in 1922.

With the elevation of Pius XI to the papal throne and the continuation of Cardinal Gasparri as secretary of state, the latter inspired and directed a new active policy of the Catholic Church, throwing the full force of the church into the effort to establish permanent peace. The Pope was in full accord and sympathy with the move.

Ever a power among the proponents of reconciliation between the Vatican and France, the cardinal worked diligently to bring about that result even before attaining to the secretaryship. Once in that office he exerted all the authority of it in behalf of that concord and finally, with France once more represented at the Holy See, he turned his attention toward the task of renewing friendly relations between the church and the Italian government.

Negotiations between the church and the state were carried on quietly, until in February, 1929, the Lateran treaty was signed, bringing to an end the dispute which had prevailed between the Vatican and Italy since 1870. Cardinal Gasparri signed the accord for the Vatican, which thereby became an independent state. For the first time since the occupation of Rome by the troops of the modern Italian kingdom, the Pope ceased to be "the prisoner of the Vatican."

Effected Treaties.

In his last years as papal secretary, Gasparri was chiefly occupied with the treaties with France and Italy, and work on the code of canon law. He was chairman of a papal commission which interpreted the law to limit further the bases for annulments of marriages.

Vatican circles and the Pope himself generally compared Gasparri with the noted Cardinal Consalvi, the papal secretary of state who negotiated with Napoleon I. Gasparri had wanted to retire long before he relinquished the office in February of 1930, when he was succeeded by Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli. His retirement was delayed, however, at the request of the Pope, who urged him to remain in office until conclusion of the Lateran pact.

Cardinal Gasparri was born at Visco, in the diocese of Norcia, Italy, May 5, 1852. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1877 and shortly afterward was given the chair of canon law in the Catholic Institute at Paris, where he remained 11 years. While in Paris he published many treatises on canon law and marriage. Raised to the bishopric he was delegated in 1898 as papal nuncio to Peru, Ecuador and Bolivia.

Returning to Rome, he was appointed in May, 1907, as an assistant at the Pontifical throne, and in December of the same year was created a cardinal. Pope Pius X, who assumed the throne after the death of Leo XIII, entrusted Cardinal Gasparri with the colossal undertaking of modifying and codifying the canon law. He worked at the task constantly for more than 12 years and his accomplishment was praised by Catholic prelates throughout the world.

In his official work he had been in contact with statesmen and diplomats of countries throughout the world. President Wilson, during his visit to Rome while in Europe for the Peace Conference, called on Cardinal Gasparri to discuss matters in connection with the conference.

When Cardinal Gasparri celebrated the golden jubilee of his ordination to the priesthood in March, 1927, he received messages from various parts of the world. In honor of the occasion the Pope presented him with a gold chalice.

Ritchie Won't Speed Victors' Commissions

Possible Recount Impels Retention of Regular Procedure.

Baltimore, Md., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—On the theory that a demand for a recount in the recent Montgomery County election may make improper the speedy issuance of commissions to victors in the election, Gov. Ritchie today refused to depart from established procedure in granting the commissions.

It was expected that attorneys for John B. Diamond, Democratic organization candidate, defeated by Charles F. King, Fusion candidate, will file a demand for a recount. Yesterday the Governor received a letter from the law firm of Peter & Simpson, representing Mr. King and two other Fusion candidates who won in the election, demanding that the commissions to the victors be issued immediately.

In declining to depart from the established procedure, Gov. Ritchie pointed out that the commissions for all victorious candidates in the election of November 6, will be ready about the last of the week.

The Governor's Letter.

The Governor's letter to Peter & Simpson said:

"It is just possible that the attorney general may consider that the filing of a petition for a recount on Monday, the nineteenth, may make it improper for me to forward the commission, until the petition has been acted upon.

"The election returns from Montgomery County were received in my office on November 14, and the custom has always been to receive and record the returns from all of the counties, then make out the commissions and forward them all, duly signed by the secretary of State himself. This work is being done now, and I am expecting to forward the commissions so that they will reach the various counties on or before next Saturday, November 24.

Requests a Ruling.

"I don't see any reason why I should depart from this custom merely because a recount is to be asked in one of the counties—I am, however, writing to the attorney general for his opinion as to whether in view of the circumstances he considers that I should issue the commissions immediately, which would be contrary to the usual practice.

"Personally, I would be disposed to think that it would make no difference whether Mr. King received his commission or not. If a recount shows that he is not re-elected, then he could not hold office, whether he had received and been sworn in under commission or not."

The Governor announced he is taking no hand in the tie vote controversy in Anne Arundel County, in view of the fact that the courts have been called upon to make a ruling on the issue so as to avoid an expensive special election.

Schuschnigg Takes In The Sights of Rome

Rome, Nov. 18 (AP).—Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria doffed the mantle of statesmanship today and became a curious tourist.

He is in Rome for momentous conversations with Il Duce, but with no conferences or receptions on schedule for the time being, he went sightseeing. Tomorrow he will visit the Roman Forum and is scheduled to see Mussolini in the afternoon. On Tuesday he will see Pope Pius.

Virginia and Maryland Schools Enlist Many New Aspirants.

A total of 836 students in 35 high schools entered the second Washington Post Scholarship Competition during the past week, bringing total enrollements to date to 6,065 in 124 high schools.

Although major awards of eight four-year tuition scholarships in Washington universities are available only to seniors who will qualify for college entrance next year, hundreds of underclass members are entering the project for class credits and honors and in many cases for the advantageous start they may gain for the writing of winning essays next year.

Grand Jurors Guarded After Death Threats

Los Angeles, Nov. 18 (AP).—Death threats telephoned to two members of the county grand jury, and warnings to three others to "watch their step," caused armed guards to be furnished the jurors today by the police and sheriff's office.

The grand jury recently started an investigation into financial affairs of the present and last city and county administrations.

Poor Fish Puzzles Science

Scientists at Harvard University are scratching their heads over Dalia Pectoralis, shown above. As far as any one knows he's the only fish who can live as long as two months in a cake of ice. The Dalia above, known more familiarly as the Alaskian blackfish, was frozen in a refrigerator at the Department of Commerce aquarium, then thawed out head first. He started to wiggle when the picture was taken. Scientists say its anabiosis, or suspended animation.

U. S. to Take Lead In Geneva Drive To Control Arms

Geneva, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—The United States plans to take the lead in a campaign for a world arms traffic accord when the steering committee of the general disarmament conference convenes Tuesday, it was revealed tonight. Hugh Wilson, United States Minister to Switzerland and arms expert, will conduct the drive.

Soviet Russia may oppose the convention on the ground that it is too limited and possibly merely a device to keep the general conference alive unutil Germany decides to return. Anglo-American quarters feared Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet foreign commissar and League of Nations delegate, might revive his earlier plans for arms control, whereby the council would be asked to close the conference and imply that Germany is responsible for its failure.

Litvinoff's permanent peace conference then would be created to sponsor security agreements, which are the keystone of Franco-Russian policies.

London, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Details of Great Britain's plan for world control of the arms traffic will be presented to the League of Nations by Capt. Anthony Eden, lord privy seal, it was disclosed tonight.

Capt. Eden left for Geneva last night. The plan includes formation of an international armaments court authorized to sit in cases concerning individual contracts for the export or import of arms.

Priest Asks 5 Million To Join 'Social Lobby'

Detroit, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin appealed over the radio today for 5,000,000 members for his newly organized National Union for Social Justice to constitute "an articulate organized lobby of the people."

Father Coughlin said he was determined to make the union a tremendous force in the formation of legislation looking toward the enactment into law of the 16 points he enumerated in an address a week ago when he first announced his plan.

Missing Boy Is Found With Young Woman

Lad Followed Her, She Says, From Lexington to Chattanooga.

from in front of his home here last Thursday.

Police here said no ransom demand had been made but that charges of kidnaping or of unlawfully detaining a minor would be preferred against the woman who gave her name as Bernice Lou Givens. Kentucky's kidnaping law provides death in the electric chair as the maximum penalty for kidnaping for ransom.

Lad Well But Hungry.

Police and detectives here said one theory they had was that the young woman had taken the child, which she had first said in Chattanooga was her brother, in order to attract sympathy and make it easier for her to get rides along the highway and to beg food and lodging.

William Hackett, Chattanooga detective chief, telephoned Police Chief Ernest Thompson here that the boy was well and in good condition but that he appeared to be hungry when found playing in a yard in north Chattanooga. "He ate heartily," Hackett said.

Two Lexington detective sergeants, G. W. Maupin and Claude Embry, and two Department of Justice agents, Thornton and Keay, who had been searching southern Kentucky and adjacent Tennessee towns on tips that a young woman and a boy answering the description of Jackie had been seen hitchhiking southward were notified by police radio and hastened to Chattanooga. They said they would bring both back to Lexington tonight.

Strike May Tie Up Los Angeles Trains

Los Angeles, Nov. 18 (AP).—Locomotive trainmen of the Pacific Electric Railway have voted to strike, increasing the possibility of a general tie-up of city street car and interurban lines of Los Angeles.

C. T. Nolan, general chairman of the Locomotive Men's Brotherhood, said tonight the strike, if actually called, would affect most of the 1,540 Pacific Electric employes.

For Reflection At Geneva.

Paraguay's smashing attack upon Bolivia's southern defense came just three days before the League of Nations Assembly will meet and recommend submission of the Chaco dispute to the World Court. It is difficult to escape the unpleasant conclusion that the league's efforts to bring about a peaceful settlement precipitated what appears to be the most vigorous offense in the Chaco war.

The assembly's Chaco committee has recommended that the dispute be submitted to the World Court for adjudication of the claims of the two countries, and that in the meantime the door be left open to a friendly understanding. Every indication forecasts adoption of this report by the assembly on Tuesday. A committee consisting principally of neighboring countries will be created to bring about and maintain a truce until a permanent solution of the controversy can be effected.

The government of Paraguay was keenly aware of the fact that the league had taken leadership of a determined movement to bring this senseless war to an end. Anxious to extend her military lines before decisive action could be taken at Geneva, Paraguay launched a ferocious attack which seems to have overwhelmed the Bolivian forces on the Pilcomayo River front.

The problem of negotiating a peaceful settlement has been obviously complicated. Apparently victorious on the battlefield, Paraguay will be loath to give up the territory she has won. Unfortunately, she will be able to cite recent precedents where territory has been taken—permanently sequestered, in fact—through conquest. It will tax the ingenuity of the league, under present conditions in the Chaco, to secure an agreement based on the inherent merits of each country's claims. Indeed, the assembly may well consider ways and means by which it can prevent its own activities from stimulating fresh hostilities.

"Wee MacGregor."

The late John Joy Bell, whose death in his beloved Scotland has attracted scant attention in this country, was not a great writer. To the art of fiction he was in somewhat the same position as Mr. Edgar Guest is to poetry. And this is not meant as a disparagement of either party.

Mr. Bell created one character who will live in the memories of those who met him in the pages of a once very popular book. He was "Wee MacGregor." Aside from this most Scottish of Scotch characters, Mr. Bell gave us nothing of lasting merit. But in this he was not alone. There have been innumerable writers whose names never got into the dignified books of English literature, but whose works are none the less widely, fondly and happily read.

We quoted from the hard-boiled Mr. Hemingway the other day, because he defined what he thought made a good novel. If, he said, the author could make his book seem more true than if it had really happened, then he was successful. That is a pretty stiff test. Few authors pass it. Some of those who fail to receive a high mark on this score, nevertheless are properly treasured for some earthy, homely quality in their people or their prose.

The recent death of the author of "Wee MacGregor" reminds us of this truism, so easily forgotten as the mad presses roll in an endless production which fortunately includes quite a number of Wee MacGregors who are loved, even if they are not literature.

No More Whiskers.

From time immemorial, or at least since the ten days that shook the world, soap and Russians to the vaudeville mind, have been paradoxical terms. Nevertheless, proletarian Russia, a cold country, has ignored the jibes, grown its whiskers and taught, along with the use of tractors and tunnels, the value of soap and water.

Isvestia, Communism's official organ, has recently instituted a campaign that has all the earmarks of national cheese week, for example, in capitalistic America. The campaign has a slogan: "Shave every day." The newspaper, in ringing editorials, urges the workers never to appear in public with shaggy chins, and everybody seems to be determined that the campaign will be a success.

Among the great achievements of one or the other of the five-year plans has been the new Moscow subway, and this seems to be one cause of the current tonsorial campaign. Isvestia intimates darkly that the time may come when the pride of the proletariat will be barred to those who have not shaved! Thus passes one of the symbols of the Revolution, the defiant whiskers of the workers that were wagged in the face of capitalistic refinement.

No more whiskers, demands that the peasants no longer eat with their knives, suggestions that men give up their subway seats to women—these are the shibboleths of the new Russia. We like to think that Russia is learning these things from us. But, as any American subway traveler and cafeteria patron can vouch for, if Isvestia's plans are made effective, perhaps we can learn something from Russia, after all.

A Constructive Attitude.

Candid business leaders admit that the new drive toward recovery is an effort to preclude the enactment of extreme economic measures in the forthcoming session of Congress. Apparently they hope to bring about sufficient improvement in the business outlook by the time Congress meets to strengthen their protests against drastic innovations that might retard recovery. In short, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States seems to have concluded that the best defense against new legislative handicaps is a united attack upon the problem that gives excuse for such measures.

To point out this motive does not detract from the significance of the movement which has been inaugurated. Business leaders have decided to make the best of a situation that is admittedly unsatisfactory to them. Silas H. Strawn, chairman of the committee that will direct this cooperative effort, epitomized the business viewpoint in these words:

> Business has come to regard the realities of the situation. It recognizes that the country has given a mandate to the President. * * * All we want, all we can ask for and all that the country needs is a thorough spirit of cooperation. And when I say "cooperation" I mean a condition in which government does not attack business and business does not attack the government.

For at least a year industry, business and finance have been waiting for a solid footing on which they could proceed with normal operations. Most of the uncertainties which have induced this hesitation still exist. But there is no immediate prospect of changing the general policies from which those uncertainties arise. Business has the alternative of accepting the broad outlines of the New Deal and joining in a cooperative effort to aid recovery, or of following an obstructive policy which might bring the Administration to grief and at the same time prolong the depression. The wisdom of its choice is not open to question.

Uncertainties that are, to some extent, beyond the control of the Administration could not be removed by an obstructive business policy or by the philosophy of despair. Of course, risks will be encountered in any forward-looking program, but they may be no more formidable than the hazards of continued drifting. If business and industry can be united in an upward movement, the activity of one group will stimulate activity in others, thus tending to break the vicious circle which keeps all economic operations at a subnormal level.

Moreover, the Administration appears to be more disposed to cooperate with business than at any time since March 4, 1933. There are indications that some of the emergency organizations will begin winding up their affairs if private agencies are ready to assume the functions which the Government has been performing. A genuine improvement in the outlook for private industry would certainly be a deterrent to the appropriation of another vast sum for public works, and a reduction of unemployment should be quickly reflected in lower relief expenditures. From this viewpoint the Chamber of Commerce's program is well timed to assist the Government in eliminating some of the discouraging uncertainties of the current period.

It is not a question of business men formulating a recovery policy that would be ideal from their viewpoint. The problem at hand is to work out a basis on which business policy can be adapted to the broad outlines of the New Deal and the New Deal itself can be adapted more effectively to the objective of recovery. If a working relationship of this sort can be established, a genuine stimulus will be given to recovery.

Mussolini's Astute Move.

Premier Mussolini has not only made himself supreme head of the Italian state, but by his astute foreign policy he has put himself in a position to dominate the European political scene. In issuing his challenge to Germany to declare a policy of nonaggression toward Austria or else sign an agreement with other European powers guaranteeing Austria's independence, he has delivered an effectively timed ultimatum.

Germany is at present much concerned over the outcome of the Saar plebiscite. Fearing invasion of that territory by France as well as action adverse to German interests by the League of Nations, the Hitler government is most anxious to avoid any policy that might arouse fresh antagonism in Europe. Under such conditions, Germany can ill afford to irritate her European neighbors by refusing to cooperate in plans to assure Austria's neutrality and continued independence. Moreover, a proposal that would make the two chief rivals for Austria's favor joint guardians of her independence is especially hard to reject, since Germany can not accuse Italy in that case of harboring secret designs against Austria.

If Chancellor Schuschnigg and Premier Mussolini are merely plotting to keep Austria out of the clutches of Germany, their deliberations will do little to safeguard the peace of Europe. Indeed, Julius Deutsch, Socialist leader of the recent Austrian revolt, who is now in the United States, regards the Austro-Italian conversations as definitely leading toward war instead of peace, because he believes they are likely to strengthen the hold of Italy upon Austria. The plan for joint guarantees, however, tends to invalidate that assumption.

At present the results of Premier Mussolini's astute move are difficult to predict. The one thing certain is that he has capitalized Germany's intense interest in the Saar plebiscite to strengthen his own dominating position in Europe.

Stabilization Straws.

Senator King, an active member of the congressional bloc that forced the silver purchase act upon a reluctant Administration, is opposed to all plans for "stepping up" silver buying in world markets, fearing that they would "ruin China and discredit silver as a money metal in the eyes of the world." Even more surprising, however, is his declaration in favor of an international conference to stabilize the dollar so that we would know just what it is worth in any foreign land.

The Utah Senator's conversion is only one of a number of significant indications that sentiment for currency stabilization is rapidly gaining strength. The most important evidence of this tendency is the recent executive order permitting a free movement of capital from the country, which has been generally interpreted to mean that further devaluation of the dollar is not in immediate prospect.

However, one-sided action is not sufficient to restore order to a world in which most currencies are constantly fluctuating. Indeed the steps taken by the United States to strengthen confidence in the stability of the dollar, have actually increased the strain upon the currencies of the "gold bloc" nations. They were already feeling the effects of a capital outflow due to a combination of political and economic disturbances. Now gold shipments in this direction have been further encouraged by the removal of restrictions upon exports of capital from this market.

Recent efforts of the Treasury to check an outflow of gold from the continent through stabilization fund operations and advances against gold shipments by the Reserve Banks, for example, the $25,000,000 loan to Belgium, are significant evidence of official concern as to the fate of the currencies of the "gold bloc" countries. Not only have moves been made to strengthen confidence in the dollar, but the authorities are actively cooperating to prevent instability from developing elsewhere.

Such efforts, like Senator King's solicitude about the effect of silver buying upon China, are symptomatic of a radical change of attitude. The old emphasis upon the necessity of monetary experimentation and the reiterated statements that the definitive value of the dollar could not be determined under present conditions have ceased to carry conviction. This country has learned that it must reckon with the policies of other nations. On the one hand, the alleged benefits of devaluation are likely to be offset by defensive counter-action. On the other hand, the advantages of a return to a stable dollar would be forfeited if European gold currencies should collapse and the British pound take an accompanying downward plunge.

While political conditions on the continent militate against speedy stabilization, therefore, it is evident that the Administration has come to realize the desirability of paving the way toward ultimate stabilization agreements.

Some brilliant persons are like a mirror, in that they reflect light without absorbing it.

Under Two Flags.

"Fire if you must this dark bobbed head, but spare my homemade flag," she said. And, with words to this effect, Miss Esther De Lee, pretty brunette teacher, walks out of the school in Pompey, N. Y., into the pages of practically every newspaper in the country.

It is hard to determine whether all the publicity incumbent on Miss De Lee's "ousting" was due to "the principle of the thing" or because Miss De Lee happens to be youthful and exceedingly comely. Gone are the days when a teacher's chief requisites appeared to be a hawklike face, hair skinned back into a tight skew, and a penchant for putting her pupils in the wrong.

But while teachers may come and teachers may go, trustees run on forever. The very word "trustee" commands respect, even a little awe. And that anyone, especially one of the young teachers under his wing, should defy a trustee is enough to cause consternation in Pompey Hollow. All the trouble came about because Miss De Lee removed an American flag from the place where the trustee had designated it to be hung, and substituted one of her own making in another corner. When he ordered the original one put back in its place, she refused to comply on the ground it would be dangerously close to the stove.

This particular trustee, Mr. James M. Armstrong, might have got by if he had simply "rested on his morals." Instead, he is said to have called State police to come and forcibly eject Miss De Lee. That is not what one expects from trustees nowadays. Immediately Miss De Lee became the sympathetic figure in the row. Between the vivacious brunette and the strong-armed Armstrong, what room remains for choice?

A Scapegoat Wanted.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Attaining superiority in anything is achievement, be it scholastic work or football. The question is: Which contributes more to character education, (1) the unjust, resentment creating, official frown for thousands for a spot of roughness by half a dozen, and the wholesale denial of the opportunity of achievement, or (2) the continuing of the opportunity of achievement with its consequent constructive elements of praise, honor, reward, satisfaction, etc., the introducing of intelligent sports handling and the individual disciplining in the one spot where needed and where it might be applied with constructive value?

For years playing-field conditions have not changed, been corrected or used as an alibi.

A change in public opinion due to a broken window does not rectify the mistake of creating resentment. Nor should any leadership of resentment, especially of a radical nature, be permitted to escape a swift, stern precedent. Nor should so much Government property be so inadequately guarded.

Naturally, from this incident there arises another question, what brand of psychology may be expected to administer the new character educational experiment? And, should this important work be handled as ineffectually as the children's play, will a subaltern goat be found to take the responsibility for failure? D. W. BROWER.

Washington, Nov. 12.

He Stands Pat.

The the Editor of The Post—Sir: You may agree that the standpat type of adherent often overworks his program, to the incalculable harm of his cause.

It is possible that some of the financial theorists and advisers in Washington are glued too fast to the idea of eventually persuading or coercing banks and investment borrowers to loosen up. Some even proclaim (groundlessly) that it has already been done.

Senator Joe Robinson said, in his Little Rock speech on November 12, that this had not been done. But he did say in effect that, until banks and investors got inoculated with this confidence virus, the Government would continue the emergency program. That is bad, but it is bound to do it, despite budgets, legion, or what not, unless we can locate some of that virus. We can't stop now to stabilize the dollar, though that would turn the wheels at once.

The standpat theorists, after two years, know this: That the emergency billions will not stay in circulation (and that's the yardstick of business), but will go right back to the banks, which already have more than plenty.

Election Wonders.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In political parlance, a landslide is an unforeseen and unpredicted flood of ballots which sweeps the one party or the other into power by surprise. The overwhelming victory of Roosevelt and the New Deal in the recent congressional election was neither a landslide nor a miracle. In the mind of the average voter the result was predicted and discounted in advance.

But there were several instances where the results were so unexpected and surprising as to take our political breath. That Pennsylvania, whose Republicanism is reactionary, rock-ribbed and ancient, especially when reenforced by liberal-minded Gifford Pinchot, should elect a Democratic Senator, Governor and a majority of the members of Congress certainly should rank as a modern political miracle.

And, then, there is little Delaware, the smallest of all the States save one, both in size and population, which gives us our second surprise. Delaware is classified with the Southern States which gave Roosevelt all but an absolutely solid delegation both in the Senate and House, and yet this little Southern Commonwealth is the only State in the Union which elected a solid Republican delegation. If not a miracle, this is certainly remarkable.

But strangest and most unexpected of all, Durham, N. C., where the Negro is supposed to have been reduced to a political nullity, and where a Negro Democrat is regarded as a joke among the whites and as a jeopardy to his own race, elected two Negro Democratic justices of the peace. Verily, the age of miracles has not passed and wonders will never cease!

There Are Others.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your correspondent William Myers calls attention to Hoover's preelection speech about a chicken in every pot and an automobile in every garage.

How about Roosevelt's preelection speech that he would give employment to all unemployed at all times in the Government in self-liquidating projects? Nearly two years of that "at all times" period have gone by and according to the figures of A. F. of L. there are between 10 and 12 millions still unemployed.

"Only By Faith."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Would that I could glorify God but can a gnat add glory to a beautiful sunrise! I would praise His name, but can the chirp of a cricket be heard amidst the rumble of a thunderstorm! His glory is more wonderful than the heavens, for they are His handiwork and we can not span the heavens, therefore we can not add to His glory.

We would sing His praise, but our voices are lost amidst the great host of the angels of heaven. We would follow His footsteps, but, alas! the flesh is weak and we walk in the flesh, even as He walked in the spirit.

We humbly petition Him and He hears our cries, but our faith is weak as we look about us at the chaos of this world and our hearts fail us. Yet there is no comfort except in our faith in God. Hearts everywhere are overburdened with care as we see the suffering about us and perceive that our ablest leaders are bewildered by the problems ahead.

Only in God is there comfort, and only by faith is there security.

Disabled Veterans.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read in the papers that the Government is going to try to pay off the veterans who don't receive disability pay. Does the Government really know the truth about the disabled and what the majority of disabled men of the World War do with the money they do get? We disabled men need our bonus as well as the able men of the World War.

It is true that we get a small check for being disabled. In 1933 we were cut in our pay 25 per cent in order to help the relief of others. While they cut us, did they realize that we had mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, wives and children whom we were helping out with our disability pay? We disabled men went without clothes and lots of things to help our friends. The strong men were the only men to whom CWA work was given.

If the bonus is paid, let them pay all or none. If they pay now in full, let the Government take the interest off, or keep the bonus until 1945 and not take the interest off. I have about $248.50 bonus coming without the interest removed. With this money, I could try to recover my health and also help others in need of relief. But in ten years from now we may need the bonus worse than at present.

I think President Roosevelt is the greatest President we have ever had, even greater than Washington.

Should Novels Be Censored?

Many Englishmen who once strongly opposed any censorship of the arts have in recent years modified their views. Even Mr. Bernard Shaw seems to have retreated somewhat from his former position. The controversy which once raged over the censorship of drama has more recently been made to turn on the question of films, and still more recently on that of novels. The libraries committee of the Westminster Corporation, deploring the character of much of the fiction let loose upon the public, questions whether a public library, supported by the ratepayers, should simply give the public what it asks for, or should it remember that many readers are intellectually defenseless? Is it not its duty to refuse to circulate morally loose and objectionable books?

The committee emphatically says "Yes." It goes further, and adds that just as the British film industry has set up a body known as the British Board of Film Censors, so there should be a Board of Novel Censors. Any books that came under its ban would be rejected by all the public libraries of Britain. Such a board would virtually have the power to prevent publication of any novel to which it objected.

The problem involves a difficult dilemma. The pernicious effect of the free circulation of certain books can scarcely be questioned; but a censorship such as is proposed threatens serious injustices. It would necessarily be exercised arbitrarily, and might be exercised unwisely; it might check the communication of new and illuminating ideas; it might prove a serious restraint upon the freedom of the press.

A more reasonable way out of the difficulty can be found. Each individual librarian or library committee is called upon to exercise judgment in the choice of books. It is within their rights, and surely part of their duty, to choose only those books which they judge fit for publication. If an error be made in rejecting a book, at least it will not be an error repeating itself in every library in the country—it can not seal the fate of an author. Responsibility to guard the public against pernicious literature should be recognized, but not be so extended as to become tyranny.

The Post Impressionist

Are The Grapes Sour?

Post Office, Monday.

WOMEN in business don't regret having become business women.

If indeed "the title of housewife has again achieved prestige," it's only because the facilities of housekeeping have improved.

And any woman who argues otherwise is arguing from the philosophy of Sour Grapes.

These, at all events, are the conclusions of one of this Column's most faithful correspondents, Mrs. Lelia Kestler. Some while ago, we published—in our sweetly noncommittal way—a summary of investigations made by Mrs. Marie L. Darrach. They announced a strong back-to-the-home tendency among women at present "gainfully employed outside the home." Mrs. Kestler takes issue with Mrs. Darrach.

Mrs. Kestler reminds us:

"Mrs. Darrach thinks that 'many women who have made a living in business are now regretting it,' because 'this country has been no land of golden opportunity' for business women. She believes that, were such women 'planning their lives over again, a home, instead of an independent career, would be their choice.'

"Sour grapes!" writes Mrs. Kestler. "And proverbial hindsight!... One might say of certain marriages that they were anything but golden opportunities. Anyhow, the number of women who let careers interfere with marriage is practically zero . . . After 15 years in the business world, in contact with hundreds of women, married and unmarried, I've failed to hear of one who registered a complaint at being able to support herself.

"Mrs. Darrach thinks that married women 'have grown tired of contributing 85 per cent of the time and energy, and 50 per cent of the funds, necessary to maintain a home when both husband and wife have jobs.'

"But theoretically marriage has always been a 50-50 proposition. Out of a group of 55, I counted 20 little Barbary hens—with a larger share of personal bravery than common hens generally have—who refuse to be regimented into the special niche prepared for them by the woman's-place-is-the-home vigilante. It is absurd to say that these women go to business just for the pleasure of using up their surplus energy. They work in order to live comfortably and preserve their self-respect."

And about that statement of Mrs. Darrach that the word "housewife" was regaining prestige as a title?

Says Mrs. Kestler:

"The vocational title of the woman who devotes her work to the care of her house may be the same today as of old. But the 'housewife' of today leads the life of a butterfly as compared to the lonely worm of yesteryear—that is, when the husband draws a living wage.

"If there is an upward trend in the occupation of housewife," writes Mrs. Kestler, "it may be due to the fact that women have had to burn down their houses in order to get their roast pigs. . . . The Victorian theory of the home compelled women to resort to strange behavior in order to give their dwarfed personalities a chance.

"It isn't," Mrs. Kestler believes, "any more normal for the average young woman to find complete satisfaction within the four walls of her home than it would be for the average young man."

We are glad to say that, however severely Mrs. Darrach suffers at Mrs. Kestler's hands, The Post Impressionist escapes. Another example of the safety which lies in not expressing opinions!

Of course, in the Darrach Column, we did venture a question. There was some quotation about the freedom from worry enjoyed by a husband whose wife earns a good salary. We wondered whether such a husband didn't feel more dependent than free. And to us Mrs. Kestler remarks:

"Anyhow, I notice that such husbands never turn down the money their wives bring in."

But that was merely a playful pat.

All we'll say now is that, even if Mrs. Darrach is preaching the ancient philosophy of sour grapes, why, whatever the real merits of the grapes in any given case, the sour-grape philosophy is at least consolatory.

We have always felt so. When you can't get something you want, what better solace can there be than the assurance that, if you had got it you wouldn't have liked it?

Referendum Backs League In Bay State

Home of Late Sen. Lodge Finds Majority Favors Entrance Now.

By Francis H. Russell
(Special Correspondent of The Post.)

Little public attention has been given to the Massachusetts referendum on American membership in the League of Nations, voted upon in many communities of the Commonwealth in the election two weeks ago. The results have been analyzed for The Post in the following article by a well-known Boston attorney.

SHOULD the United States join the League of Nations? Sixty-two per cent plus of those voting on this question in the Massachusetts election on November 6 answered it in the affirmative. It was printed on the ballot in all or part of 115 Massachusetts towns and cities. In only 4 of these was there a majority against the League.

In Massachusetts we have what we call "public policy questions." On petition of a comparatively small number of voters, such an issue as that of American membership in the League of Nations may be put on the ballot of any State representative or senatorial district at a regular election. With the primary purpose of guiding representatives to the General Court (State Legislature) this form of advisory referenda proves an excellent means of determining sentiment on public questions.

The League of Nations referendum appeared on the ballot of 36 representative districts. These were chosen as constituting a reliable cross-section of the State, both geographically and as to different classes of population. Part of every Massachusetts county is included, except two sparsely settled island counties—Dukes and Nantucket. Fifty-seven and forty-one hundreths per cent of the referendum vote was cast in industrial centers; 23.92 per cent in suburban towns; 14.84 per cent in rural territory, and 3.83 per cent in college centers.

AN analysis of the referendum area, shows it to be exceptionally representative of many of the various elements that go to make up the American electorate. There are the foreign-born in the manufacturing cities, like New Bedford, Fitchburg, Lawrence and Worcester, running in places to over 40 per cent of the population. Then there are the counties such as Franklin, with its 18 villages, where the citizens are virtually all of native stock. Several of the more prominent intellectual centers of the Nation are in the referendum area. Typical American business and professional folk cast their vote in the suburban towns.

As it appeared on the ballot the public policy question on the League asked:

> Shall the representatives in the General Court from —— be instructed to vote to instruct the President and the United States Senate to enter into full cooperation and membership in the League of Nations, with the explanatory reservation that the United States shall not engage in war with any nation except by vote of Congress as provided in the United States Constitution, and such other reservations as they deem wise?

Lieut. Alden G. Allen and Mr. Michael Francis Doyle, Philadelphia attorney, made a few speeches in favor of American membership in the League and two four-page pamphlets were given rather wide distribution. There has recently been agitation by certain newspapers against the League. Otherwise there was no campaigning on the question. Badly overshadowed by an unusually lively gubernatorial contest, the League issue had almost no attention from the press. Therefore, we believe the referendum can be taken as expression of the calm, uninfluenced judgment of those voting.

WITH this in mind, there is particularly to be noted the comparatively narrow range in the results when considered by different groups of population. The vote appears to have been entirely nonpartisan.

The total vote from college centers gave the greatest affirmative majority—73.67 per cent, suburban towns returned the smallest majority in favor of the League—57.71 per cent. The total rural vote was 65.14 affirmative. Of the total vote cast in urban-industrial centers, 62.37 was in favor of the United States joining the League.

Of the four towns returning negative majorities, one (Milton) is suburban; one (Amesbury) is industrial, and two (Salisbury and Brewster) are rural. All of them are normally Republican except Amesbury.

This can hardly be taken as indicative of any partisan bias, for, on the basis of 1933 elections, 88 of the towns returning affirmative majorities were Republican and 23 Democratic. Massachusetts was in the Harding column in 1920, when, according to the opinion of some, the Republican majority was a "solemn referendum" against the United States joining the League. In 1924, Massachusetts gave a majority to Coolidge; in 1928 it was for Smith by a small majority, and 1932 found it in the Roosevelt camp.

IN 1932, the League referendum was on the ballot of 11 Massachusetts cities and towns. All of them returned affirmative majorities, totaling 63 per cent—virtually the same as this year. None of these towns were among the 115 cities and town that voted on the question at the last election.

One of several things which add significance to this referendum is that Massachusetts was the home of two men, now dead, whose convictions are still widely respected—Senator Henry Cabot Lodge and Dr. Charles W. Eliot. Senator Lodge was credited with keeping the United States out of the League in 1920, while Dr. Eliot was a strong advocate of the League and American membership in it.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

The Pendulum.

NOTHING more strongly proves that Mr. Roosevelt is neither a Leftist nor a Rightist but a buffer between the two forces instead, than his present trip. It is hard to cite anything that more epitomizes the position of the man. Here, on this trip, is first a leaning toward the Rightists and then a leaning toward the Leftists. Something for both sides. Neither can claim victory nor claim that Mr. Roosevelt is wholly with them. He shows that he is neither the President of the Leftists nor the President of the Rightists but the President of both. In our country that is the way it should be. After we elect a man he is the President of both the winning and losing sides.

BARGERON

In his stop at Fort Harrod, Ky., to dedicate a monument Mr. Roosevelt was right up the Rightists' alley. Fort Harrod has been rebuilt to resemble the town it was when the pioneers lived there, when they hewed homes and sustenance out of the forests and the earth, when only hardy men survived the rigors of winter or one might say, the wolves that beat at men's doors.

Fort Harrod, if anything, symbolizes the old rugged individualism that made this country what it is today. It was, in fact, a monument to rugged individualists which Mr. Roosevelt dedicated.

Well, does any one suppose for a moment that Mr. Roosevelt would have glorified these men had he not the admiration for them which all of us entertain. He was back to fundamentals at Fort Harrod, back to the ground-root of things. As a matter of fact, he was back in the old order.

• • • •

Now an interpretation of Mr. Roosevelt's action in this instance, or an exegesis, as Prof. Tugwell, A.B., LLB., Ph.D., etc., would say, can only be that he gives no thought to breaking away from our old moorings; that no one appreciates more than he that while we may prune the vine from which we spring we must not tamper with the roots.

And having established this picture in the minds of all thoughtful people, those who are discerning and can read trends, what does he do? Ah, astute man that he is, perhaps he anticipated that this visit to Fort Harrod with its implications would immediately bring a yelp from the Leftists. Even as he planned his itinerary maybe he could hear the plaints of this crowd ringing in his ears.

So what does he do but swing from the old order that is Fort Harrod to the new order symbolized by Muscle Shoals. If that isn't walking the tight rope and carrying water on both shoulders one must devour one's hat.

• • • •

Two places could not be more incongruous than Fort Harrod and Muscle Shoals. One typifies the old school, the other the new. I suppose it would be brutal to point out that a monument and mute village mark the old school, while the steam of industry pours from the chimneys of Muscle Shoals. That really is beside the point.

By visiting one place he paid homage to everything which the conservatives hold dear. By going to Muscle Shoals he indicated to many that he intends to give the public utilities—well, that they are in for plenty of more reform.

His accomplishment in visiting them both on one trip, however, is that of preserving the link between the old and new and to quiet the fears of those who think we may cut entirely loose and head out on uncharted seas.

He does not intend to be drawn irrevocably to either of the extremes. He is a buffer. That is what he is. It's all very plain.

Americans Organize New Shanghai Bank

Shanghai, Nov. 18 (AP).—Hoping to expand the American commercial position in China, a group of American businessmen in Shanghai announced last night the formation of a bank to be called the Pacific Banking Corporation.

The concern will be capitalized at 2,500,000 mex ($850,000), and will undertake a general banking business, opening March 1, 1935. There are now four American banks operating in Shanghai.

New Faces in the Senate — West Virginia's Rush Holt

Has Been Called Everything From Red to Atheist; Utilities Foe.

This is the ninth of a series of sketches of the newly elected Senators, written by competent observers. Another will appear in this place tomorrow.

By Robert H. Horner.
(Political Writer, Charleston Daily Mail).

Charleston, W. Va.

THE National Capital in January will meet for the first time the tall, dark-haired young man who is West Virginia's United States Senator-elect, Rush Drew Holt, due to be 29 years and 7 months old when the Congress convenes; five months below the constitutional age limit for Senators.

How did this young man go from the obscurity of a room over a meat shop, where he kept his library of books on government, to a seat in the "greatest deliberative body on earth" within the space of four years?

There are three answers. One is, background of family. The other two are related—his ability to assemble facts and his ability to dramatize denunciation of facts when they don't seem right.

• • • •

HOLT'S immediate family background came from his father, Dr. Matthew Samuel Holt, a man of powerful physique, who, fresh from a medical college in the year 1872, entered the town of Weston, Lewis County, and began to practice. From that time on, Weston became philosophy conscious. It heard the liberal views of Dr. Holt on every conceivable subject. It heard his Republican views when he edited a Republican newspaper and practiced medicine on the side. It witnessed him in his favorite seat in front of the hotel talking government and how it should be run. It saw him turn Socialist and thrice become that party's nominee for the United States Senate, and once its candidate for Governor of West Virginia.

He was called atheist, red, radical, communist, bolshevik and other such names, yet he is known as one who is always ready to wait upon the sick, rich or poor, night or day, with or without pay, and as one who is willing to arise at any hour of the night to hold a political argument. His latest feat was to become mayor of Weston at the age of 82, after his name had been ruled off the Democratic ballot and voters had to write it in. He is still Weston's mayor.

Other kinsmen of the Senator-elect are scattered over the State and in other States. Among the most noted are Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Washington, and Homer A. Holt, West Virginia's attorney general. Another was the late John H. Holt, of Huntington, who, until his death at the age of 82, two years ago, was among the State's ablest lawyers.

• • • •

Rush Drew Holt is one of five children. He has three brothers, Matthew, Samuel and Charles, all older, and a sister, Jane, 21, who expects to be his hostess at Washington.

This is the background of the "boy" who in the fall of 1930, at the age of 25, became a member of the West Virginia House of Delegates, and developed so amazingly fast that, four years later, he was able to win the United States senatorship after taking the nomination from some of Democracy's oldest and ablest leaders.

• • • •

THE 1931 session of the West Virginia Legislature was two days old, when there arose, in the House of Delegates, the young man with long hair, horn-rimmed glasses and a husky voice. He began at once to denounce. The matter under discussion was a resolution providing for the appointment of 200 attaches. As he talked, he quoted from records of many other States to prove his point that the House had no business with so many employes—it was wasting money.

Members and spectators alike looked on. "Who's the red?" many asked.

It was Holt's first speech in the House. From that time on he was to talk more upon other subjects, and finally, almost exclusively, upon one subject—public utilities.

Holt selected as his slogan, perhaps unconsciously, the words: "I will not compromise with wrong," and he frequently used it. Once, he served upon a conference committee that was to adjust a bill to wipe out sheriffs' profits on feeding prisoners. The conferees agreed on a compromise. All except Holt. "Never!" he said. "Making profits on human misery is wrong and I will not compromise." He fought the bill, but it passed. That was in 1932, at an extra session.

Returned to the House of Delegates at the 1933 session, Holt took up the subject which he was to dramatize so that it stirred the State and eventually brought him to the senatorship.

It was the public utilities which, he claimed, were "robbing the people" by high rates and evading their fair share of taxes. He charged also that their lobbyists were in control of the Legislature. "No bill may be passed unless it bears their stamp of approval," he declared.

Upon the floor of the House, he called names and shouted out about "absentee landlords" and "invisible government." He carried the fight to every corner of the State, and he had created an all-powerful House committee, which he headed, and used to investigate all of the larger utility corporations. He gave to the people figures direct from the utilities' own records.

DURING his utility fight, the young orator virtually controlled the votes of the majority of the House's 94 members. He blocked legislation at will, and let it pass only after a period of what he called "starvation of members who are unable to stay here."

When Gov. Kump took office in 1933, Holt began at once to oppose every important measure he proposed. He fought the new county unit school bill, yet it passed and became law. He opposed Gov. Kump's consumers' sales tax bill, charging that "it will tax the food of the poor," yet the bill became law, and it, apparently, a popular one, for it saved the State from further financial distress.

When the Governor's bill to increase taxes upon utility corporations came up in the House, Holt forced through amendments which ran the rates two and three times higher than the Governor proposed, but they later were cut down by the Senate before being passed.

The young statesman forced through the House a net income tax bill, and a dozen others designed to provide further regulation of public utilities, but all were pigeonholed in the Senate without being considered.

In debate upon the floor of the House, Holt usually spoke from records, showing a remarkable familiarity with figures. He dramatized them and persuaded the House to follow him. He is quick in retort, and frequently silenced the oldest and ablest members.

EGOTISM doesn't seem to be a part of Holt's make-up. On the contrary, he is one who learns rapidly, and is always ready and willing to learn more from his elders. In this respect, he shows eagerness. He is an admirer of the La Follettes, of Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, and of Senator Hiram Johnson, of California. He would refer to them often in debate before the House.

Since his election to the Senate, his entire demeanor has changed. He appears to feef greatly the responsibility that has fallen to him, and in private conversation, he says "I'm going to do my best."

Holt is unmarried. He has been too busy studying government to think of assuming that added responsibility. Graduating from the Weston High School at the age of 14—the youngest graduate in the school's history—he went a few months later to the West Virginia University, where he matriculated. He remained at the university for only a short time and then went to Salem College, where an uncle was a professor. He graduated from Salem College with an A. B. degree. After graduation, he taught for a year at Salem College, and later for a year at the Randolph-Macon Academy at Bedford, Va.

Giving up teaching, he went to live at his home in Weston, where his family operated a store and meat shop. He worked in the store, and in a room over it, he maintained his library. In this library he studied government and collected a vast number of reports from every State in the Union, largely upon public utility regulation subjects. It was while he was living thus that he entered politics, as a candidate for the House of Delegates in 1931.

Holt likes to surround himself with friends and he pumps them upon every subject. He is fond of tennis but finds little time to play. He is also fond of dancing and bridge, but here again he lacks leisure to indulge in them as much as he would like. The door of his parents' home at Weston is never locked it is said, and it is a place where all visitors are welcome. It is there that the young Senator-elect likes most to be.

AT the close of his senatorial campaign he hurried there from Charleston to take part in a "home-coming" demonstration. After voting on Tuesday morning he hurried back to Charleston to remain at his headquarters until the returns were in. As soon as he was sure that he had been elected, he went back to Weston to be with his mother.

In a statement after election, Holt served notice that he would continue to fight "the corrupt political practices of public utilities," and added:

"I have been called a Socialist, a radical, a Communist, an atheist, and many other things. I am glad to avail myself of this opportunity to say to honest and legitimate business enterprise that it has nothing to fear from me. Such business will always find me not only willing, but anxious, to assist in protecting its legal and moral rights."

Edgar Wallace

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

I REGARD the late Edgar Wallace as a public benefactor. His stories and plays are always interesting and you can depend upon them. That is to say, if you are in a mood that needs to be changed, he will change it for you. He is one of the most reliable anesthetics in the whole world. Tedious journeys lose their tedium, night-wakefulness loses its suffering, and worry for the time in annihilated.

His capacity for invention was all but miraculous. He could and did write three or four novels and a couple of plays in a few months; and they were all admirable specimens of their kind. In a year when nine out of ten new plays failed, Mr. Wallace spent three days in Chicago looking over the city, and then sat down and composed a gangster play that ran a year.

His own history is as astounding as any romance, he concocted. Fatherless, motherless, he might have gone to the poor house, only he was adopted at the age of nine days by a seller of fish in Billingsgate. He therefore really earned the title NINE DAYS WONDER, though he never used it. This fish-vendor and his wife, with children of their own, were kind to the extra baby, and Wallace never for got their goodness. They saw to it that he went to what we call in America the grammar - school, where, he says, he learned three plays of Shakespeare by heart, because they made such an impression on him.

He sold papers on the street; before he was 20 he entered the army; was sent to South Africa, and had highly exciting experiences.

In the early part of this century he returned to London and engaged in newspaper work; was sent out anywhere, everywhere, as newspaper correspondent. Ambition to be an author possessed him, and the rest is told in the titles of his book.

He wrote about 150 novels and at a speed that seems impossible, and would have been for anyone else. Within three years he wrote 20 plays and innumerable newspaper articles. He was enormously interested in horse races, and wrote a regular column every day on that theme.

He was eminently successful in hitting the mark at which he aimed, which was to arouse and maintain the interest of spectators and readers in the theater and in the library.

It is said that he drank gallons of tea every day and night; tea was always at his elbow and was his chronic source of inspiration. It is one of the many paradoxes of his career that all his blood-thirsty villains and murderers came out of the teacup. This is the finest instance in literary history of a tempest in a teapot.

No End of Books

Man Without a Country; Inquisitor of the Soul; Glorifier of Girls; Glory-Hunter.

By Theodore Hall.

Four hundred or so years ago there were but three chief ancestors of our best type of modern thought—that which is independent, tolerant, skeptical, and humanistic. Any reader of that far-off period will remember his thrill of recognition on first coming upon the works of Sir Thomas More, of Michael de Montaigne, and of Erasmus. In a time when people could scarcely believe that the oceans didn't drop off at their edges, here were men we have to call "modern."

The last-named is now the hero of a biography by Stefan Zweig, who has turned from the dramatics of Marie Antoinette to the quiet and studious life of "Erasmus of Rotterdam" (Viking, $3). Illegitimate child, obscure priest and school-teacher, he named himself, forsook his native Dutch tongue for the universal Latin, acknowledged no one country as his own, and became, "of all the writers and creators in the West, the first conscious European, the first to fight on behalf of peace, the ablest champion of the humanities and of a spiritual ideal."

You will find little drama in this eloquent book, though his conflict with Luther over free-will was famous in its day. You will find little spectacular achievement. But you will see clearly and movingly how hard-pressed were the roots of many a notion we take for granted now.

The passionate, tortured and exalted life of the author of "Anna Karenina" and "Crime and Punishment" is narrated full length in "Dostoevsky: A Life" (Harcourt Brace, $3.75) by A. Yarmolinsky.

Dostoevsky wrote feverishly, made love madly, gambled crazily, suffered in a Siberian prison and fought with epilepsy until he succumbed. Mr. Yarmolinsky, chief of the Slavonic division of the New York Public Library, weaves Dostoevsky's writings into his career, shows us just how he became the nineteenth century's "Grand Inquisitor of the human soul." It is a painful but magnificent book.

Ziegfeld of the Follies used to wake up at 6 and start wiring or telephoning everybody from his press agent to someone who had just discovered a new American beauty in Peoria. The press agent had to think up a new publicity stunt—the pulchritudinous Peorian had to come hot-foot to New York. Night and day Ziggy saw to it that his great business went on of glorifying the American girl.

He was, in fact, the first to make beauty into a big-money industry. His Follies were the first to scale prices up to $5.50 and $6.60, the first to auction seats (Diamond Jim once paid $750 for ten), the first to pay chorus girls more than $30 a week. The least of Ziggy's girls got $175 a week and maid service, the stars from $500 to $650. But it was all part of a business which would discard a $25,000 scene merely because it didn't quite click.

And in the center of it was Ziggy—dynamic, erratic and golden-hearted as the day is long. He could pick a beauty with one eye, and he couldn't tell a good tune if it were handed him on a silver platter. His best shows were tremendous successes, and he never knew when to stop fussing to make them better. He was as sensitive to criticism as a one-novel author. Once in Cincinnati a critic said harsh things of one of Ziggy's shows; Ziegfeld responded by taking huge ads in the papers and hitting back at the critic; the result was that the people of Cincinnati rallied around their fellow-townsman and before very long elected him mayor.

Without Ziggy we would scarcely have heard of Will Rogers, W. C. Fields, Marilyn Miller, Bert Williams, Anna Held, Ed Wynn, Fannie Brice—perhaps even of Eddie Cantor, who, with the collaboration of his "gag-man," David Freedman, has just written this lively and anecdotal story of Ziggy—"Ziegfeld: The Great Glorifier" (King, $2).

Say "Custer" to almost anyone, and he will reply with "last stand." Fewer will recall the heights above the Little Bighorn, fewer yet know of the circumstances of the Sioux attack and the two bullets which gave Custer his martyrdom and glory. And not one person in a thousand can tell you who Custer was, or even his first name.

To supply this deficiency, which I'm not going to call lamentable, Frederick F. Van de Water has written a full-length and assiduous biography—"Glory-Hunter: A Life of General Custer" (Bobbs-Merrill, $3.75). In it we learn that George Armstrong Custer was a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry, a brevet major general, known as "The Boy General of the Golden Locks" and "The Murat of the American Army." And also that he was a swaggering, contentious, not wholly admirable man, who hunted glory all his life and won it by a death which is still mysterious.

Mr. Van de Water boubles the material available on Custer, and presents it with considerable eloquence. Old Army intrigues of the last century are raked up, the atmosphere of frontier posts well caught. If you have particular interest in that field, this book will hold you. Most of us, though, might well be content to let Custer rest on the fame of that one bloody day.

Defining a Liberal Found No Easy Task

Stanley Walker and Post Writer Both Try Hands at Popular Indoor Sport.

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

MR. STANLEY WALKER, whose overlordship of the New York Herald Tribune's city room is said to be in the nature of a mild and benevolent autocracy, attempts the impossible in his second book, "City Editor." Not without some measure of success, he defines the indefinable and gives his version of What Is a Liberal?

This has been a popular topic of conversation for some time. The word liberal has been much abused of late and there are many members of the giraffe school who insist there ain't no sich animal. It is much easier to say who fits under the heading of Radical or Reactionary than it is to say who is a Liberal. The Liberal, whether defined or nebulous, is despised alike by extremists of both wings and it is obvious that today, more than ever before, he is in a precarious position and greatly in danger of being smothered.

Although Mr. Walker's cruel portrait has already been printed in The Post I give it again for the benefit of those who may have missed it. Then we may go on with the sermon.

A liberal, says Mr. Walker, "is not a member of the Union League Club. He likes Jews. He frowns on lynching. He is hot for peaceful picketing and bitter against Cossack policemen. He is tolerant of both Karl and Harpo Marx. He wants to deport Dr. Haefstaengl, here for a college reunion. He swears by the Bill of Rights, but is always tinkering with it, scraping and varnishing. He likes dirty books. He is a rabid individualist, stringing along with Thomas Jefferson Mondays and Fridays, and the rest of the week he is a collectivist. In short, he doesn't make sense. His label is frayed. He is a lost maverick wandering on the vast ranges of the world of journalism, politics and ideas. And he knows no brother."

UNHAPPILY, there is too much of a near truth in this to deny that Mr. Walker has caught a likeness of an individual who may know no brother, but who has a flock of uncles, aunts, and cousins scattered everywhere. But it is not a complete picture. Often in his book Mr. Walker, without stopping to be so explicit, writes about another indefinable, a Gentleman. He accepts the gentleman while he scorns the liberal. One gathers that he has no use for radicals and, from his often expressed hope for better journalism, it is obvious that he is no reactionary, which is but another word, usually, for that unpleasant character, the Stuffed Shirt.

Under the present set-up any one who lets concern for the fundamentals harry his mind must place himself, perhaps subconsciously, in any one of four categories. He may be either a Tory, a Liberal, a New Dealer, or a Radical. If a Tory, he proudly admits it and sits back for the worst to happen. If a New Dealer, it does not really matter what happens, so long as there is generosity and action of one or another kind. If a Radical, he generally has pretty definite beliefs about what he would like to make the world over into but, if he hasn't, he is sure that only an acute upheaval will ameliorate the distresses of the world.

Whichever one he is, he looks intolerantly upon the liberal, and is loud in his assertion this strange individual is a weary intellectual without any fixed beliefs. I wonder if this is quite so, if there is no case for the liberal; even for the liberal as defined by Mr. Walker.

THE liberal, to my notion, is he who has a fairly well-developed capacity for indignation. He is by no means a misanthrope, but he is not deluded by any belief that man is perfect, individually or collectively. His outlook is, to a certain extent, tinged with cynicism. He is quite unaware that capitalism is hardly the ideal system under which to live, but he has his suspicions that mankind is evil enough as a species to throw a monkey wrench in any other machinery that might be installed.

The real liberal has read, and would like to see enforced, the Bill of Rights. But he also believes in evolution and realizes that articles assembled for the use of a small collection of States in 1787 are not necessarily workable today. He has a fondness for history, whose lessons he sees continually ignored. He suspects the presence of ulterior motives where they sometimes do not exist, because their absence is usually the exception to the rule. The fourteenth amendment is one of his pet hobbies, partly because he believes in the fundamental justice of its contents, and partly because it would please his sense of humor to see it suddenly enforced.

He is not a member of the Union League Club, as Mr. Walker says, because membership there would be boring to one of intellectual capacities, which he honestly believes he possesses. He is tolerant of Karl Marx because of a certain phrase in the Communist manifesto that is so much more honorable than a somewhat similar phrase in the Bible. He is tolerant of Harpo Marx (or he was) because the liberal has a sense of humor.

THE liberal is amused by the incongruities of life. He is apt to lean to the leftward, because he finds that almost without exception those persons in history for whom he has a natural kinship were radicals. He is hot for peaceful picketing because it is lawful and decent. He even believes that people who own no newspapers, control no radios, and some times don't even know the language, have a right to express their opinions.

The true liberal likes dirty books. That, I suppose, is true, and it is one of his human weaknesses. The true radical is a better man in this respect. He is so taken up with his ardent love for remaking the world overnight that he has no time for them. The true Tory likes them, but doesn't admit it. The true liberal admits it, reads them, but he is not disinclined to read the other passages of the Bible, as well.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

In Case of an Elevator Strike.

("Elevator Men Threaten General Strike."—Headline.

By strikes of elevator men
My comfort's not impaired;
It has its compensations in
The trips I may be spared.

When elevators do not move
I'll not be very sad,
For I live in a "walk-up" and
For once it's not so bad.

When shafts are dark and silent in Apartment houses fine,
I'll have my little chuckle for
There is no "lift" in mine.

I shall be saved the frenzied search—
The search that takes so long—
To find the proper car to board—
And then find I was wrong!

That dreadful feeling when I ask,
"Fourteen?" and hear him say,
"This car express to twenty-eight!"
Will seem so far away.

And, oh, I'll get a brief respite
From that eternity
Which comes when starters wait to set
An elevator free.

If office lifts are rendered null
'Twill be one time when I
Can NOT wait by the button "Down"
And see eight cars flash by!

To reach floor 52 will not
Be simple, I've a hunch,
But what's the difference? That guy
Was always out to lunch!

WHEN the first down on the boy's cheeks becomes too prominent, give him a Dry Shaver. He will never go through what you have endured — lather, blades—the inevitable cut and smart—and the general mussiness of old-fashioned shaving.

And for you there is an astounding revelation when you try the Shick Shaver. Your skin, calloused from blade-shaving, will flake off gradually, and you will have a new, younger-looking skin, easier to shave close.

Her smart purse with the zipper top was of green.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

Mary Winifred (Mad Peter) Brown has sent out white cards, announcements of her intentions of having a tea on November 30 in her nice home on Tracy place.

Chatting with Mildred English the other afternoon, we timidly approached the subject of Army-Navy game versus the Black and White Ball, and wondered aloud how a mere mortal could possibly be expected to get to both of them. Mildred heaved a sigh and defiantly announced that she was going to the game and return to Washington not only in time for the much-talked-of ball, but for a dinner as well. Ah, me, another of those autogyro devotees in our midst.

Not long ago Marjorie Jane Dampman, who is one of the Navy debutantes of this season, started out to purchase a pair of evening slippers for a certain gown. Upon her return her mother was shown the newly acquired accessories which were bright turquoise blue. Thinking of Marjorie Jane's peach-colored frock, she asked if they were meant to go with that particular one.

"Why, yes indeed, they just match my bracelet," replied Marjorie Jane.

New Bandeaux Show Frocks To Advantage

Form Fitting Accessories Available for All Types of Figures.

By Katherine Smith.

(During the absence of Miss Ruth Anne Davis, her column is being written by Miss Katherine Smith.)

LOTS CAN be said about evening frocks, their new cuts, colors and lines, and as much can be said about the underthings that show off the lines to best advantage.

Never before in the history of evening inside accessories, has there been such an assortment of bandeaux. They come in all sizes, from 32 to 40 (bigger ones may be ordered), three depths, and in several widths and colors.

One of the best numbers is a lace affair, with elastic straps and a girdle around the waist. When it is on, it leaves a wide square space in the back, large enough to take care of the most extreme cuts. This model comes in black and tea rose.

Satin seems to be the prevailing material. One bandeau is a combination of satin and net, half in half, with net on top. Another, all net, comes in various widths, for the small or large figure. You have your choice of satin or elastic shoulder straps, the backs being so fashioned that these straps won't show.

If you have had trouble being fitted, take a look at the large assortment. They are all very new, just on the market, and there is a style to take care of every figure variation.

New Lastex Girdle.

Another fine number in undies is the new lastex girdle and panties combined. They're soft, won't bind, and give just enough support without being uncomfortable. There are seven styles of these, some complete foundation garments with lace brassiere tops, others in girdle size. Prices run from $2 to $5.

They are boxed-in little affairs that look like books, with hinged lids. These containers are in several pastel shades.

Marionette Show.

There's a marionette show going on in a town window. A Shirley Temple doll (you must have seen them), comes to life and puts on a little act. This is something that your small son or daughter (particularly daughter), will enjoy.

Novel Smoking Sets.

The newest in smoking accessories are these colored mirror trays and boxes. They are made of heavy glass, very clear and in various colors, with silvered backs. The effect is almost jewel-like, with the sparkle of the glass and the soft tints of green-blue or amber.

The ash-trays are severely square, with little grooves in the corners on which to rest the cigarette. The boxes are oblong.

"Flat Fifty" Covers.

If you don't want a cigarette box, get half a one. That is, the top half. For there are new "flat fifty" covers, made to fit down on the tin of your favorite cigarettes, to disguise commercialism. These covers are tin, gaily painted with modernistic designs or silhouettes of coaches.

They make good, inexpensive Christmas gifts for smart friends. Because there's no transfering from package to box, no tobacco is spilled; the cigarettes will keep fresh in their original tinfoil lining. The covers are very simple to put on and take off, and will stay put.

Individual Holders.

Another nice smoking accessory is a box of 20 holders for as many guests. The mouthpiece on the holders is a quill, the upper part is pale turquoise cardboard, edged in gold.

The box is the same color, with the same trim. These holders are excellent for fastidious ladies who don't want to get loose tobacco on their lips. The box costs only $1.

Chromium Goblets.

Something very stunning in the goblet line comes in little glass bowls, smooth and round, that set in chromium standards. The standards are like two strips, crossed and welded, in upright position, then cut out in the middle to fit the bowls.

These are the essence of modernism and good taste. The glasses come in several sizes (all have standards to match) for water, wine, cocktail or liqueurs.

New Note in Pajamas.

Have you seen the flannel lounging pajamas? They're ideal to slip on in place of a bathrobe, and are still appropriate in case you have unexpected company.

They are very tailored, with shirtwaist collars, two tailored pockets, long sleeves and a finger-tip length coat. A stunning combination is brown, piped and belted with orange.

If you want something more glamorous for lounging, look at the silver blue and Chinese red satin outfit. The trousers are red, the top blue and on the back and upper sleeves red dragons are appliqued. Another lovely suit has a white brocaded satin top and jade green trousers.

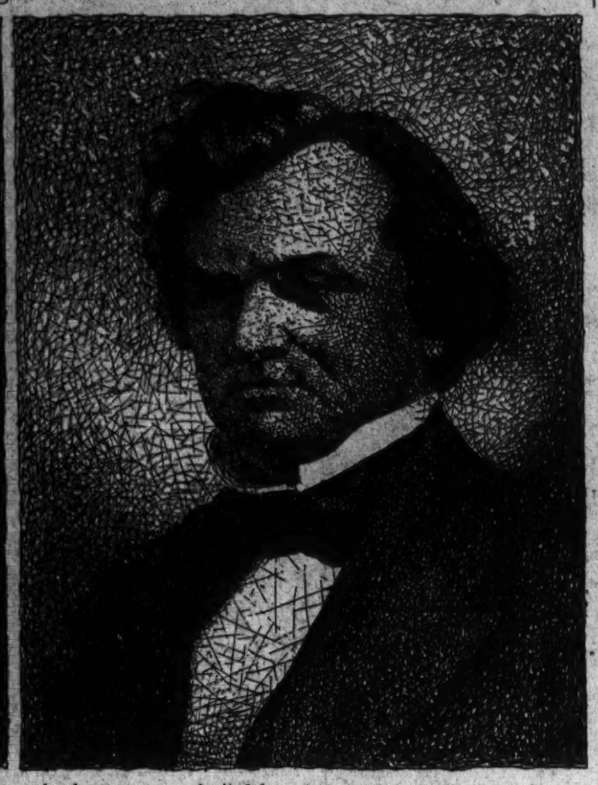
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Stephen A. Douglas—Adele Cutts.



At a White House reception the spark of romance was ignited between Stephen A. Douglas, Senator from Illinois, and the beautiful Adele Cutts, famous Washington belle of the 50's. Douglas, a widower, with two sons, fell instantly in love with the 21-year-old girl. A happy marriage resulted. During the famous debates between Lincoln and Douglas, Mrs. Douglas traveled with her husband and was his most faithful supporter.

Statesman Met Bride-to-Be In 1856 at White House Reception.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

THE year was 1842 and the White House was ablaze with lights. Strains of band music floated through the windows and mingled with the shrill sweetness of children's laughter. It was a fancy dress ball for children given for President Tyler's little granddaughter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Tyler, and all the elite of juvenile Washington were present.

Among the throng of merrymakers was a tiny flower girl of seven. Her name was Adele Cutts and she had been born within a stone's throw of the Executive Mansion and two of her kinsfolk, George Washington and James Madison, had been Presidents of the United States. Little did tiny Adele dream as she danced gaily around the east room in 1843 that fate was to so order her life that she would marry a man who was to come within striking distance of the Presidency, only to be defeated by a tall, lank country lad—Abe Lincoln, of Illinois.

In the galaxy of Washington belles who have graced American society none shine with a more lasting or greater glamour than Adele Cutts. Even today stories are told of her social prowess, her beautiful clothes, her collection of beaux and her thrilling romance with Stephen A. Douglas, the little giant of American politics in the middle of the last century.

Adele Cutts was the granddaughter of Richard Cutts and Anna Payne, younger sister of Dolly Madison, wife of James Madison. Dolly, sprightly and ready as ever with her pen, once adapted some lines from "John Gilpin's Ride" to fit her sister Anna's family:

"My sister Cutts and Cutts and I and Cutts children three Will fill the coach, so you must ride on horseback after we."

James Madison Cutts, son of Richard and Anna Cutts, married Ellen O'Neale, of Maryland, and lived with his father in a stately house on Lafayette Square. There in 1835, Adele was born. Because of the later occupancy of Dolly Madison, the house has gone into history as the Dolly Madison House now part of the Cosmos Club.

Adele was a great favorite of her greataunt, Mrs. Dolly Madison, and passed much of her time with her until her fifteenth year.

Mrs. Madison died when her great-niece was in her fifteenth year. Adele mourned her deeply, and the bereavement gave a soft melancholy to her appearance, which heightened her attraction, it is said. Adele was a beauty of Grecian type, with shapely head, large, dark eyes, chestnut hair with glints of gold in it, creamy skin and a tall, slender figure. At White Sulphur Springs, where she passed her summers with other Washington belles, she set apart from them by the clever simplicity of her costuming, for she dressed always in white with a white kerchief across her shoulders, which enhanced the whiteness of her throat.

Douglas, Native of Vermont.

Now, as to the party of the second part of this romance. Stephen A. Douglas was a son of the green hills of Vermont, having been born at Brandon in that State in 1813. He was 21 years older than Adele Cutts.

Douglas had come to Washington via Illinois as a Representative in Congress from that State, and in 1847 as Senator.

It was at a White House reception in 1856 that he first met Adele Cutts. She had just passed her twenty-first birthday, adored and admired by all of social Washington, with suitors swarming about her. Douglas with all his political fame, his good looks and his renown as an orator to recommend him, was not unknown either. The guests stood apart to watch the meeting. He was a widower with two sons, but he is quoted as having said that he had lost his heart completely once in his life and that was to Adele Cutts the night he met her in the White House.

Adele Cutts was not an easy prize. From triumphs in the Senate chamber Douglas would hasten to her to plead his own cause more eloquently than he had public issues on the floor of the Upper House.

Opponents Traveled Together.

On November 20, 1856, he was married to Adele Cutts and at Buchanan's inaugural ball a few months later the belle of the ball by common consent was the wife of the man Buchanan had defeated for the nomination.

When the Douglases went to Chicago even the rumor that Adele would attend church was enough to bring hundreds of well-wishers. The Midwest was wild to see Douglas' young and beautiful wife and she went everywhere with him. In the famous debates between Lincoln and Douglas, Lincoln often traveled in the same car with his opponent and his beautiful wife.

Senator More Eloquent in Asking Her Hand Than in Debates.

Douglas Stricken in 1861.

Mrs. Douglas stood by her husband's side during the historic campaign in which Douglas was defeated. He was no grudging loser. When the Lincolns came to the White House Douglas and his wife were their close friends and advisers.

Fate, however, had a bitter blow in store for Adele Cutts. While in Chicago in June, 1861, Douglas was stricken with a mortal illness. It was apparent that he was to die and as Adele knelt beside his bed he gazed at her with such intensity that those present felt that he must be trying to fix the memory of her lovely face so he could carry it with him throughout eternity. She held his hand and, when she asked him if he had any message to send to his sons, he answered simply: "Tell them to obey the laws of the land and to support the Constitution of the United States."

In the midst of the mourning, Adele Cutts Douglas sat calm and brave.

Returning to Washington she lived here honored and much sought out. At a ball given by a Miss Harris, who was sitting by Lincoln's side in the theater box the night John Wilkes Booth shot him, Mrs. Douglas met Capt. Robert Williams. He fell in love with her and in January, 1866, she married him. But she clung to her memories of the hero of her youth and frequently spoke of him in her old age, for she lived in Washington until her death in January, 1899.

How to Keep Well

Bladder Inflammation.

DURING the eighteenth century probably no single disease condition attracted the attention of physicians to a greater extent than inflammation of the bladder. In many cases the cause was stone or gravel setting up inflammation and obstructing the outflow of urine.

In addition to stone and gravel, cystitis may be caused by invasion of the bladder lining by the colon bacillus. This organism, a regular inhabitant of the intestine, appears in about 80 per cent of all cases. Other bacteria, especially from an infected kidney, may be found.

Patients with cystitis should be kept in bed and encouraged to drink large quantities of water or milk. The diet should be modified so as to exclude condiments, seasoning and alcohol.

Much of the general management will depend upon whether the urine is excessively acid or alkaline. If the urine is highly acid, alkalis are indicated in sufficient quantity to convert the action from acid to alkaline and to maintain it in that condition.

If the urine is strongly alkaline, acid-forming substances must be used. For this purpose sodium phosphate, sodium benzoate, or ammonium chloride may be given. In an earlier article the ketogenic diet was mentioned as a means of rendering the urine acid. This consists in reducing the amount of carbohydrates and greatly increasing the amount of fat in the diet. If the diet alone is not sufficient one of the drugs noted above may be added.

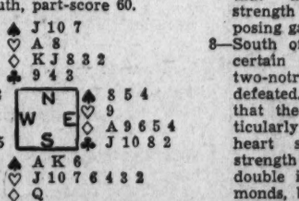
AN UNORTHODOX PASS

The best players do not always make the technically correct bids or passes every time it is their turn. However, every time they do make an unusual bid or an unusual pass they do so because a situation has been created which has put them in a position from which they know they will be able to obtain a better than average result by adopting an unconventional plan of campaign. Peculiar part-score situations, when coupled with some knowledge of the opponents' strong points or weaknesses often bring big swings.

On the hand below the South player, with a very strong holding, made a most unusual pass on the second round of the bidding and as a result finally secured a very fine result for his team.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.
East-West, part-score 30.
North-South, part-score 60.



The bidding (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs).

South	West	North	East
1♡(1)	1NT(2)	Pass(3)	2◇(4)
Pass(5)	2NT(6)	Dbl.(7)	Pass
3♡(8)	Dbl.(9)	Pass	Pass
Redbl. (10)	Pass(11)	Pass	Pass

1—A sound and normal opening bid. Despite the part-score South of course still opens the bidding with one, knowing his partner will keep it open on practically nothing.
2—A doubtful and overly aggressive overcall—justifiable only in view of the part-score situation.
3—North, with no particularly good bid available to him over one notrump, decides to bide his time and try to find out just where the strength is. The part-score situation makes the pass perfectly safe.
4—East's bid is not so much based on strength as it is based on fear of a notrump contract in view of East's 5-4-3-1 distribution. In addition, East, with 30 on score, does wish to give his partner one chance.
5—A brilliant pass. South knew West to be a very aggressive player and he knew also that West would be particularly aggressive since East, his partner, was known to be quite conservative. South passed with the almost absolute certainty that West, with a part-score of 30, would bid two notrump, particularly if South himself created the impression of comparative weakness by failing to bid over two diamonds. South was deliberately lying back and preparing a trap.
6—According to schedule.
7—North of course must show signs of life. The only thing he can do to show his partner that he has considerable strength is to double the opposing game contract.
8—South of course is reasonably certain that East and West's two-notrump contract will be defeated. However, he fears that the set will not be particularly big if West has two heart stoppers and if the strength on which North's double is based is not in diamonds, but in clubs or spades. South knows on his partner's double that there must be at least one or two hearts in the North hand and he accordingly decides not to accept the penalty, but to try for a game, which he is certain will be a laydown. In addition, South knows that West will read the three-heart bid as a rescue of a doubtful double and accordingly will double three hearts for penalties, feeling that South's bid was made from weakness and not from strength.
9—Again according to schedule.
10—South is not content with a slight victory. He wishes to turn it into a complete rout.
11—I am sure that West at this point began to suspect that he had been tricked—even before the play started. However, there was no place West could run to. He had to just grin and bear it.

Seafood Adds Spice, Variety To Bill of Fare

Many Kinds Obtainable In Washington at Low Prices.

By Dorothea Duncan.

A SEAFOOD dinner served once a week will add variety to menus. In many cities Friday is fish day, because this is the only time that fresh seafood is shipped into the market. However, fresh seafood is procurable in Washington every day in the week.

Right now seafood, especially fish, may be purchased very reasonably. The following are a few of the varieties of fish now available: Steak fish, salmon and halibut; pan fish, Norfolk spots, trout and croakers; baking fish, haddock, rock and mackerel; boiling fish, cod and sole. The above classification does not mean that these particular varieties must be baked, boiled or fried. Some fish are adaptable to several methods of cooking. Scallops are particularly good just now, also.

Garnishes and piquant sauces enhance the appearance and flavor of seafood. Different sauces lend themselves particularly well to certain types of this food. For example, boiled salmon is excellent served with egg sauce, hollandaise sauce or tartar sauce, and is most effectively garnished with water cress, lemon, or parsley. Be sure then, when you are serving seafood, that you add a sauce and garnish that will best complement the flavor of the fish.

LUXURY

By MARYSE RUTLEDGE.

Jocelyn Crane has accepted the offer of wealthy friends, the Oliver Keenes, to go abroad with them, because her husband says that renting their house will relieve them of expense and allow him to give his entire attention to his advertising business, which is floundering. Jocelyn soon finds she is being used to shield an affair between Rita Keene and Prince Glazanoff. A friend of Ollie Keene's, named Carrie Franks, has stolen letters written to Rita by the prince. Jocelyn tries to retrieve them and in a scuffle with Carrie, part of a string of pearls, loaned to Jocelyn by Mary Darby, a business friend of Dick Crane's, is lost. Determined to disrupt the affair between Ollie and Carrie, Jocelyn persuades him to give up his intention to go to Monte Carlo with Carrie and, since he is lonely, breaks a date with wealthy Ogden Temple, to go to dinner with him instead. At the restaurant, they meet Carrie.

"LO, CARRIE," Ollie's voice thickened with his flush. Self-conscious.

But Carrie was showing Jocelyn that she could be a woman of the world. "Mrs. Crane—how do you do!" Her mouth twisted scarlet in her pink face. Carrie knew that the Monte Carlo trip was off.

"Sit down, Carrie," Ollie didn't meet her eyes.

"Thanks——" but she didn't sit down. She shrugged her plump shoulders, staring at Jocelyn. "Slumming? Well, Ollie knows the ropes." Then, with a "I'll be seeing you later," which was directed at Ollie, she headed back to her table, where she was the life of the party.

It was then Jocelyn saw the Marsdens. She hadn't known they were in Paris. Her heart gave an uncomfortable jump when she realized they must have been staring at her during Carrie Franks' conspicuous visit to the table. Jocelyn had never liked Lena Marsden. Now the sight of these two faces from home seemed to close out and narrow everything else in her mind but the sharp, darting thought of Dick.

Prying Questions.

"Some people I know I have to speak to," she murmured to Ollie, and went over to their table. "What a surprise! When did you come over?"

Bill Marsden's ruddy face cracked in a grin. "How's tricks, Lynn? You look swell——"

There were the usual questions. Lena's eyes dodged and slid over to Ollie. "Is Mrs. Keene here?"

"No," Jocelyn answered easily, but she could read the nipping gossip in Lena's eyes. Jocelyn Crane away from her fine friends in a Bohemian restaurant with—? Who was the man she was with?

"I'm with Mr. Keene tonight," she supplied the information. "Did you see Dick before you sailed?"

Lena Marsden pricked it out. "Yes, indeed. He and Mary Darby came out to dinner and stayed overnight. We had a lovely evening, I thought," she added, "that he wasn't looking any too well. Worried, I guess."

"Really!" Jocelyn had herself very tightly in control. "His letters sounded cheerful enough."

"Well, he has lots of friends. Mary Derby does what she can to keep him from being too low," Mrs. Marsden let drop, glancing across the room at Ollie, who looked what he essentially was—a man of smart clubs. "You must come and see us. We'll be here only another week——"

"I'd like very much. Whenever you say. I'm at the Georges V," Jocelyn said.

But when she had gone back to her table Mrs. Marsden remarked to her husband, "We won't see her again. She's too busy playing around with that Mr. Keene——"

Ollie was ready to go. His high spirits had wilted under Carrie's meaning glances from her table. And when he and Jocelyn got back to the hotel, Rita was waiting for them in the salon.

"Well, I must say——" she began. "Where have you been? Didn't you dine with Temple, Lynn?"

"No; I put him off."

"There's a cable for you," Rita tossed over her shoulder as she trailed to her room without further comment. "It's on the desk."

The cable was from Mary Derby. It read:

"Sorry obliged to ask for pearls. Please deliver them to Marsden, Hotel France et Choiseul."

With Mary Derby's cable, a sense of disaster entered into Jocelyn. Too late she realized that she should have written Mary at once about the loss of the pearls. Now anything she did or said would lack the ring of truth.

Why had Mary sent for the necklace she had thrust upon Jocelyn? The answer forked back with the reach of lightning. Those pearls had been Mary's challenge on the night of sailing—a symbol of all that Dick could not afford to give his wife. An ornament which Mary Derby, a successful business woman, did not wish or need to wear. Immediately it had classed Jocelyn among the parasites.

Dick Would Misunderstand.

Now Mary was the victor and to her belonged the spoils. It couldn't be—and yet Mrs. Marsden's barbed words must have meant just that. Dick and Mary visiting her together. Quite natural, the way she had said it, as if it could be taken for granted. And hadn't the tone of Dick's recent letters been more impersonal, almost cautious?

How could she go to Dick now with the wretched story that he would surely misunderstand, Jocelyn asked herself. Anyway, what could he do? If he had had money enough to buy pearls, she wouldn't be with the Oliver Keenes now.

No use whining. Half the necklace was at the bottom of the Atlantic, where Carrie, in her hysteria, had hurled it. And Jocelyn had no money to replace the vanished pearls.

Solution Offered.

Prince Glazanoff turned up for coffee that night.

"I have something most charming to show you, belle amie," said the Russian, magnificent today in his good humor—a huge, feline man of leopard green and yellows whom all women looked after when he passed.

Jocelyn's breath was suspended as he tossed on the table necklaces, earrings, rings—all of pearls, as if by the very force of her thought she had summoned them there.

It amused him to watch the greedy light in Rita's eyes, her scarlet-tipped fingers reaching out. "Are they not marvelous imitations?" He laughed as she withdrew her hands sharply. "A friend of mine, Count Naderlyn, sells them for a song—a Russian song."

Address Requested.

"Could your friend copy a necklace?" Her voice must have sounded strange, for both Boris and Rita turned to look at her. She sent back a controlled surface smile.

Glazanoff's green-flecked eyes narrowed upon her. "It is Naderlyn's specialty, dear lady," he said in his caressing Slavic cadences. "Women who do not wish to wear their pearls—sometimes because they have them no longer—they go to my friend."

"I'd like his address," Jocelyn said quietly.

Mrs. Ann Embrey and Her Corps of Assistants Make Convention Delegates at Home in Washington

Troupe of 25 Young Women Aids in Registration Service

Greater National Capital Committee Group Directs Sightseers and Helps in Selection of Gifts; Many Ask About the Mall.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

WHENEVER the plumbers, the bankers, the farmers, or the nurses come to town, Mrs. Ann Embrey and "her girls" are on hand to greet them. A convention in Washington without Mrs. Embrey and her little troupe in the foreground would be as rare as Niagara Falls without honeymooners.

It is Mrs. Embrey who steers lean educators to the Smithsonian Institution; who herds clubwomen into the right hotel rooms for committee meetings; who tells implement manufacturers where they can buy gloves and boudoir pillows to take to the little women back home.

For the last three years she has been director of service for the Greater National Capital Committee of the Washington Board of Trade, which is just another way of saying she sets up an information bureau and registration desk wherever and whenever a convention is holding forth in the Capital.

The 25 young women who assist her, affectionately termed "my girls" by Mrs. Embrey, are chosen as carefully as a musical comedy chorus. It is Mrs. Embrey who does the choosing.

Eighteen is the age limit at one end of the scale. The other end is less arbitrary.

"They mustn't look over 28. It doesn't matter how old they really are just so they don't look over 28," said Mrs. Embrey yesterday at the Raleigh Hotel in the midst of telling delegates to the National Rural Forum how to find the zoo and how to get to Mount Vernon.

"Most of my girls are college graduates," she continued. "They all have homes here. They work for me because they think it's fun, not because they have to. And what's more, they all have their own friends here in Washington, so that they take only a business interest in the men who attend conventions."

No Romances as Yet.

Not a single romance has budded at the information bureau and registration desk. Nor is it likely that any will. Not only do the girls have their own groups of friends, but most of the men who come to conventions are married. And they bring their wives with them.

"A couple of years ago, when times were hard, most of the men came alone," explained Mrs. Embrey. "That's when we had to rack our brains thinking up gifts for them to take back home. But for the last six or eight months the wives have been coming with their husbands. Now we get requests for the names of toy shops, so both parents can take something back to the children. Many of the women buy clothes while they're here, too. And you'd be surprised how many of them ask us what they should wear to such and such an affair."

Most prevalent request of the convention attendants concerns the Mall—that strip extending from the Capitol to the Lincoln Memorial and lined with Government buildings.

"They all want to know how to get to the Mall, though I think a good many of them don't know exactly what the Mall is," Mrs. Embrey said. "But they've all read about it and they want to see it while they're in Washington. I guess Mount Vernon gets the second largest number of inquiries. And then the White House. They not only want to see part of the White House. They want to see all of it. Sometimes we have a hard time convincing people it is a home, not a museum."

Whenever there is a women's convention in progress the bulk of requests is for directions to the exhibition of gowns worn by First Ladies of the United States.

Women Get Confused.

For several reasons not quite clear to herself, Mrs. Embrey believes women's conventions are more difficult to handle than men's.

"The women just don't seem able to get down to business the way men do. And they usually get confused when they try to register. Of course there are exceptions. I've never seen a smoother, more business-like convention than the American Dietetic Association. The nurses were fine, too. We registered more than 8,000 of them."

Men's conventions have become a lot more dignified and serious in the last few years, Mrs. Embrey believes. When she started looking after big groups in Miami, Fla., seven years ago, the playboy spirit ruled the meetings.

"But now most of the men have to pay their own way to conventions. Their companies don't send them any more. And the men come to attend the sessions in the hope of learning something instructive. They don't have money or the inclination to cut up much now," she explained.

Conventions in Washington and Mrs. Ann Embrey are almost synonymous. For the last three years at almost every convention in the Capital Mrs. Embrey has been in charge of the registration desk and information bureau. Twenty-five young women, to whom she refers affectionately as "my girls," assist her.

Daughter-in-Law.

(A Venture in Mind Reading.)

WHILE OTHERS praise your fruited trees,
The shrubs so neatly trimmed and pruned,
And chat of trite immediacies,
I stand there utterly marooned.

For me there lies an icy moat
Around the family house you prize
And where the mirror shadows float
I glimpse my failure through your eyes.

Though I would reach my hands to clasp
Your own in sympathy and trust,
You still elude my prairie grasp
And leave my faith to rust.

Antipathies.

ITEM, THE MAN by whom he was reminded
Of the dead calfish days before the rope
Broke, and he ran till he was tired of running;
This fellow, staring here and snorting hope,
Dangled the ancient tether past a wall—
Right there it was—had he come thence at all?

Item, another one who knew too well
The paths that he had come by, if he came;
Who shrank the middle distance till it sat,
A small divided desert, full of tame
Four-footed memories, that by day remarked
His face with little coyote eyes and barked.

Item, the newly known one with the brow
That wore a different wisdom from his own.
What loss in that, he wondered? Yet he saw
How each comes only once, and comes alone;
And asked the wind if many wandered off
In the sheep's night, missing the weather's cough.

Out of my garden of ice it shall blow,—
Jubilant ensign of emperor purple

Give me a seed of your conquering spirit;
Up from my indolent dust it shall flower,
Climbing to light in the flush of adventure,
Sinews of faith and the pulses of power.

"Scorpio."

IF NOVEMBER 19 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:30 to 10:30 a. m., from 1:30 to 3:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m. and from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m.

It will be advisable to make up your mind that you will refrain from jumping to hasty conclusions on this November 19, as they may result in erroneous opinions being formed.

There is a probability that a question will be put to you, which if answered diplomatically and without reflection on some one's integrity, is likely to bring both gratitude and friendship of an enduring quality. It might be well to avoid entertaining during this day's business hours, as the evening will be far more auspicious for social gatherings.

If a woman and November 19 is your birthday, if necessary force yourself to think optimistically, for morbid thoughts will retard the progress you should make through an opportunity that is likely to be presented in the near future. You have the ability to do things successfully.

Various branches of teaching, selling and soliciting may provide a line of activity not only interesting but also profitable for one of your personality. Married life should prove attractive and offer a means to social advancement that might be desirable.

If a man and November 19 is your natal day, you will be wise to avoid allowing yourself to get in a rut, either mentally or socially. If you seek advancement there is every likelihood you will attain it. Cultivate the habit of replacing gloomy thoughts with sprightly ones. A dark outlook is superinduced by foggy thinking, while clarity of meditation brightens every situation. Chemistry, medicine, law, journalism and educational work have a great deal to offer to one born on this date

Savant Finds Children Need Friends Most

Parents Urged to Help Them Win and Hold Playmates.

DR. SAMUEL W. HARTWELL, director of one of the largest child guidance clincs in the country, is convinced the time in his life when a fellow needs a friend is when he is very young. In the current issue of the Parents' Magazine the eminent psychiatrist stresses the vital importance of youthful comradeships and pleads with parents to take a hand in helping their youngsters win and hold their playmates.

"Early and repeated social interchange between children of the same age helps the child to meet one of the most critical periods of the growing-up process," Dr. Hartwell said. "The child must have the emotional release which comes in the response of other people if he is to control his fears and meet his failures." Then, lest doting parents fancy they are sufficient unto the demand, Dr. Hartwell added, "yet the child must not have the continual conflict that comes when the release is brought about through a continuance of immature relationships with parents.

"Friends help little Bill to try himself out while he is yet young enough to be mostly concerned about himself. They help him translate his imagination into reality. They aid him in learning that happiness can come from loving others than members of his own family. Friends help the average child to find other reasons than the fear of punishment, fear of losses or feeling of guilt to give himself for behaving in a socially accepted way.

"Since the role of friends of the child's own age is so important, it is the wise father and mother who provide opportunities for the child to meet desirable playmates, to allow the child free time for his play, home where mutual consideration exists?

WELL WISHER.

DEAR INTUITIVE and WELL WISHER: I am herewith presenting your respective opinions concerning the cases of "Stranger" and "Second Stranger," for what they are worth. To continue to dwell upon, or further interpret, my original conclusions would be futile, it seems to me. But may I say, Intuitive, there was nothing in "Second Stranger's" letter to be literally construed as a deliberate refusal on his wife's part to have children. He simply wrote, "There are no children, natural or adopted."

As Well Wisher implies in his question: "Who are we to assume to weigh facts only partially disclosed?" I think none of us, with the possible exception of "Second Stranger" himself, is backed with sufficient authoritative information concerning the case to take violent issue with dissenting opinions.

Farm Women Are Meeting Crisis, Leader in Rural Work Reports

Depression and drought have made farm women politically-minded, says Mrs. Charles W. Sewell, director of the home and community department of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

They Find Way AroundDrought And Depression

Mrs. Charles Sewell, Here For Conference, Cites New Philosophy.

DEPRESSION and drought flung a challenge to the American farm woman. Accepting it, she emerged a better informed, better educated citizen, with the instruments of leadership in her grasp. Confronted by two ends that wouldn't meet—crop failures and delinquent taxes—she hit upon one solution by ingeniously working out new ways of earning money.

"The other she found by cooperating with the Government," said Mrs. Charles W. Sewell, of Benton County, Indiana, director of the home and community department of the American Farm Bureau Federation, who is attending the American Country Life Association conference here this week.

"Planned production appeals to the reason and imagination of those feminine partners in the agricultural business," Mrs. Sewell continued. "It is good housekeeping. It eliminates waste of materials and duplication of effort. It allows the worker time to rest. And it is the most orderly way out of a chaotic mess.

Women Take Hand.

"Farm women have turned to the serious study of government as an economic necessity. The economic security of their children and their communities were threatened. They began to probe into the whys and wherefores of farm legislation, the tariff, tax distribution and other subjects that had any bearing upon their problems.

"As a result, the present-day farm woman is better informed than the average city matron, whose bridge game was interrupted by neither depression nor drought."

Mrs. Sewell, as director of the Home and Community Department of the Farm Bureau Federation, contacts women farm leaders in every State and community in the country. Her present mission is hammering home the importance of organization for the farm family. Thus, she hopes to evolve concerted action in interest of farmers.

Manages Own Farm.

In addition to her executive duties, Mrs. Sewell owns and manages her own farm in Indiana. Previous to her husband's death, a year ago, she acted as his partner. Today she hires a man and his family to handle the heavy work while she oversees and plans for crop and harvest. Like many other farmers, she is cooperating with the United States Department of Agriculture in its crop-reduction program.

Her own agricultural experience has convinced Mrs. Sewell that farm management is a field peculiarly suited to the talents of women.

"Women should not be required to do the heavier work of agriculture," she pointed out, "but the economic planning of crops, purchases and marketing are nothing more than enlarged and intelligent homemaking. To me the management of my farm has offered me a real challenge. Making a success of it, not only means helping myself, but helping my Government. The conscientious farmer today is the best citizen of all."

Stresses Farm Life.

If she were selling farm life to the college student of today, Mrs. Sewell said, she would emphasize only a few points:

"First I would convince him of the dignity of the profession. I would stress its importance as a basic industry and the great need for organization to insure the permanency of agriculture. The drudge and the country gentleman may have made literature, but they contributed little to the hungry mouths of the Nation. I would show the young student that it is the intelligent, thinking worker in between these two extremes that form the backbone of the country."

A powerful writer as well as speaker and organizer, Mrs. Sewell has contributed for years to the leading farm publications of the country. She has edited issues of the Bureau Farmer, official publication of the American Farm Bureau Federation, written articles for the Country Gentleman and Grange papers throughout the country. For four years she edited the column "Over the Mending Basket" in the Prairie Farmer, America's oldest farm paper.

Does not "Second Stranger" show real evidence of character in disclaiming full credit for efforts to establish domestic felicity? He loves children. His wife prefers that they shall have none, but offers the rank substitute of her relatives. I can see small hope for renewal of love killed by such means.

I fear you evidence a lack of intuition in failing to observe that the new attraction for him is more than "a hope." Clearly he is shielding her in declaring he has no reasonable ground or assurance of success.

Muffs Stylish And Decorative

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP).—The fashionable muff that Paris revived along with other relics of the eighties is proving highly useful these early cold days.

Everywhere, except in strictly sport circles, fur muffs and tippets are keeping warm the fashionables who look to this device for prolonging the utility of a fall suit. Chosen in a fine fur, the muffs are decidedly decorative besides.

A complete set also will include a fur hat, toque, pill-box beret or peaked cap. Lapin dyed in wine red or deep blue makes colorful sets. Short-haired furs, such as leopard, ocelot, chipmunk or caracul are the best medium for sets.

In some of the styles shown, muffs and hand bags are the same thing and much easier to carry than a muff plus a separate hand bag. Slide fasteners in the top or back of the muff make the bag closing inconspicuous.

Designers apparently are taking seriously the prophets who foresee a long, severe winter ahead for 1935, for they have made muffs to match the winter coats.

These coats have luxurious fur collars reaching to the waist or long stole collars reaching to the hem. But the fur that in another season would have made deep cuffs now appears in a large pillow muff.

Cloth coats frequently have muffs of matching fabric with fur applied either as an edging or in diagonal strips across the front. The back may be plain.

For afternoon or dinner wear, the designers have made sausage roll muffs or melon-shaped ones of shirred velvet in colors to match the dresses.

Frostbite Regattas Now Popular; Women Give Men Keen Competition

Crowds Are Turning Out For Races on Long Island Sound.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

WHEN it's too cold for bathing and too warm for skating, the frostbite dinghies make their appearance. Once out, in some localities, they hold their own through the winter.

Frostbite regattas are held weekly all winter on Long Island Sound. The season has just started, and crowds are turning out each Sunday to see the neat little boats slipping about over the water.

Women compete with the men, and for four seasons they have been pressing the men hard, and frequently winning. Lorna Whittelsey, who carried off the women's national yachting cup for the third and final time this fall, is the most skillful skipper among the women, and Mrs. Dick Hill, of Larchmont, in her first season last winter, won against men and women of longer experience.

Miss Whittelsey, who has been sailing one of the little 11½-foot craft for some years, is renowned for her ability as a skipper, in races on both north and south shores of the Sound.

The number of dinghy enthusiasts has led to steadily increasing numbers of entries and races.

Scottsboro Defendant Asks for Right to Appeal.

(Associated Press.)

The Scottsboro case is back in the Supreme Court.

A petition was filed Saturday asking the court to review the conviction of Clarence Norris, colored, now under sentence of death for assault on a white woman on a railroad train near Scottsboro, Ala.

Norris, confined in the Kilby Prison, Montgomery, Ala., is under sentence of death on February 8, a 60-day delay having been granted him Friday in Alabama to permit his counsel to bring his case to the highest court.

It is understood the same counsel will this week file a petition asking the review of the conviction of Haywood Patterson, convicted with Norris.

Counsel for the two colored men, whose conviction was sustained by the Alabama Supreme Court, contend that colored persons were excluded from the grand jury which indicted them in Jackson County and from the jury in Morgan County which tried and convicted them because of "race or color."

The petition filed Saturday asserted that Alabama courts refused to permit the introduction of material evidence offered to prove that there had been race discrimination against Norris.

'Outdoor Life' Sessions Open On Wednesday

Talbott Denmead Calls on Maryland Sportsmen 'to Enlist.'

Baltimore, Nov. 18 (AP).—Talbott Denmead, president of the State Game and Fish Protective Association, said today the first Maryland outdoor life convention here Wednesday and Thursday "will prove definitely whether sportsmen throughout the State are really an active group or simply indifferent to conditions which affect the future of their sport."

Denmead, connected with the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries, outlined the purpose of the convention as to "coordinate and stimulate interest in conservation, civic, scientific, and outdoor organizations and to further increase the development and preservation of all of the State's resources so that they may be fully and wisely used."

Pointing out that approximately 75,000 hunting and fishing licenses are issued in the State annually, he said:

"There are a few in the group who obtain these who really try to cooperate with the officials in charge of conservation. We want to enlist them all in a big general and effective movement in the interest of all phases of outdoor life. Our convention here next week, the first of its kind ever proposed, will give them an opportunity to get together and do something really worth while."

Sugar Future List Gains 8 to 9 Points

Cuban Warehouse Stock Sells at 2.92 With Duty Paid.

New York, Nov. 18.—Sugar futures turned active and more than wiped out last week's losses. January gained 6 points, while the balance of the list made net gains of 8 to 9 points. Covering in December against further sales of warehoused Cuban sugars sent that month to 1.87.

In the raw market Cuban warehoused sugars sold at 2.92 cents, duty paid, up 6 points. According to trade estimates, only about 15,000 tons remain in New York warehouses unsold. Excess quota Philippine sugars continue to be offered at 2.65 cents, with buyers' ideas lower.

It would be stipulated in a new agreement, however, that the 2.18½-cent prices would hold to the end of the year. A fair business is reported in the refined market, although further special allowances in Southern territory have had an unsettling effect. The new $4.50 per hundred price remains unchanged. The London market, after going to new lows, steadied somewhat toward the end of the week.

Move Starts For Carson As Governor

Conservation Chairman to Resign Post on First of Year.

His Business Acumen and Attitude Toward Labor Cited.

By C. B. Carr
(Post Staff Writer).

Riverton, Va., Nov. 18.—William E. Carson, of Riverton, chairman of the Virginia Conservation and Development Commission, has been prominently mentioned as gubernatorial timber in 1937 when the Commonwealth chooses a successor to Gov. George C. Peery.

Since Carson made his statement that he could not remain as chairman of the conservation commission after January 1, the "Carson for Governor" movement has obtained its greatest impetus among his friends.

They are basing their claim on two factors. First, it is pointed out that his work as chairman of the commission on conservation and development has resulted in publicity for the State that has made the tourist trade one of the really "money crops" of Virginia. Second, it is claimed that he has demonstrated acute business acumen in the management of his own business and has demonstrated a sympathetic attitude toward labor.

"The Beckoning Land."

Mr. Carson became head of the conservation commission when it was established. During the years which have followed, the commission has been responsible for the phrase "Virginia—The Beckoning Land" around which advertisements have been written.

Thousands of historical spots in the State have been marked and guide books furnished tourists. Carson is credited with persuading former President Hoover to establish a fishing retreat along the Rapidan River.

As to Mr. Carson's attitude toward labor, it is recalled that his action in changing the operation of his lime kiln several years ago was widely heralded. After the depression had settled down, business at the plant is said to have acutely fallen off. He had just installed labor-saving machinery which he promptly stored away and put the work on a man-power basis. This, it is declared, resulted in employment of many who, if the machinery had been used, would have been out of jobs.

When plans were made by the Legislature last winter for reorganizing the conservation commission, it was provided that the chairmanship should be full time. As months went by, speculation grew rife as to whether Mr. Carson would keep the job. The speculation continued to the point where, in some quarters, it was rumored the move might have been a step toward getting Carson out.

He Ends the Rumor.

In announcing ten days ago that he could not retain the commission's chairmanship as a full-time job, Mr. Carson appears to have allayed all the rumors. He said:

"Plans for the reorganization of the commission originated within the commission itself, and the bill passed by the Legislature providing for a paid chairman was drawn in my office and later presented to Gov. Peery."

And in the matter of announcing that he could not remain as chairman of the commission on a full-time basis, Mr. Carson, his friends declare, incorporated in his statement a summary of the commission's work which would make an excellent plank in any political platform. This summary which, his friends add, was purely explanatory, follows:

"With the Shenandoah National Park work about completed, which was the goal set by me in accepting the chairmanship, a system of State parks in course of construction, historical markers on every highway in Virginia, and other scenic, historical and material values preserved for the people of Virginia and those that come after them; the enactment of a waterpower bill preserving for the people of the State the water powers of the State, and the reorganization of the different departments of the commission, putting them on a sound business basis, I am ready at the proper time to turn the chairmanship of the commission over to my successor."

Woolen Plant In Winchester Will Add 100

New $70,000 Unit to Be in Operation by Jan. 1, Manager Says.

Winchester, Nov. 18 (Spl.).—While woolen manufacturing in the country at large is said to have dropped to the lowest level since August 1931, activities at the Virginia Woolen Co.'s plant here have been steady, and H. B. McCormac, general manager, announced today that approximately 100 additional employes will be put to work by the first of the year.

Already 50 have been given employment, he said, in preparatory departments. The others will be added gradually until more than 560 persons are on the pay roll.

McCormac announced today that a $70,000 unit, the last included in a program of modernization which has been underway some months, is ready for the installation of equipment, and that the unit will be operating about January 1.

The Virginia Woolen mill was established in 1900 and is one of this city's principal industries. It has operated with no labor difficulties at any time. The plant now covers an area of 3½ acres, having grown from 7,000 square feet of floor space and 48 employes to more than 140,000 square feet and 560 employes. Approximately 70,000 pounds of wool is handled each month.

Easton to Have Big Yule Fete

Merchants Plan Two Huge Christmas Trees and Decoration Prizes.

Easton, Md., Nov. 18 (AP).—Easton merchants have completed elaborate plans for Christmas. As a result, two mammoth cedars, one towering more than 50 feet, and both gleaming with hundreds of colored light blubs, will bring the Christmas spirit to the city early in December.

The largest of the trees will be raised on the Plaza on Washington street and the other, erected by subscriptions from the business men of the East End, will stand on the Flat-Iron Square on East Dover street.

The estimated cost of the trees and decorations is more than $1,000. In addition, the business men have raised a fund to award three prizes for the best decorted store fronts and three for the best decorated home fronts.

Dog Hero

Folks Wonder if There's a Medal for Fritz.

East Radford, Va., Nov. 18 (AP).—People here are inquiring if there's a Carnegie medal for dog heroes.

W. E. Leach owns a German police dog and he added to his kennel with a three-months old rat terrier pup. The pup went exploring and, perhaps thirsty, ventured on thin ice on a lily pond. The ice crashed and Mickey, the pup went in. He yelped lustily, and attracted attention of both Fritz, the shepherd, and the household.

Before Mrs. Leach could do the rescue, Fritz was at the pool, circled it several times, and plunged in. He grabbed the pup by its harness, hauled him out and set him down away from the pool.

Rug Weaver Slays Woman Employer

Worked Him Too Hard, Armenian Tells Police.

Denver, Nov. 18 (AP).—Delusions and differences over the hours of his work, police said today, led an Armenian rug weaver to hack and stab to death Mrs. Lillian Sarkisian, 51, Denver business and society woman.

C. J. Burns, assistant captain of detectives, said Abraham L. Kloian, 58, disclosed in a written confession that he also had intended to kill John Narsies, at whose home Kloian was arrested Saturday night a few hours after Mrs. Sarkisian's death. The presence of several children caused Kloian to give up his plan to kill Narsies, he said.

Kloian was employed as a handy man in a rug shop operated by Mrs. Sarkisian and her husband, Dr. Toros Sarkisian. Police quoted him as saying the Sarkisians had worked him long hours at low pay and tried to "cheat" him.

Wife Already Wed, Father of 2 Wins In Annullment Suit

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—Claiming his wife was already married when he wed her three years ago, Harry D. Taylor, of Star Junction, Pa., was successful in his effort to dissolve the marriage when Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan in Circuit Court here yesterday signed a decree of annulment.

Taylor charged that he married Luella Matheney, of Uniontown, Pa., at Frostburg on December 9, 1931, believing she was single. Two children were born to the union, he said, before he discovered early this year that she had previously been married to Harry Raymond, at Oakland, Md., and was not divorced. Confronted with this information, he said, she returned to her mother's home at Uniontown with the two children.

Young 'T.R.' Mourns With Beaten 'Bert'

Writes Gov. Ritchie of Sorrow in Defeat by Nice.

'Al' Smith and Farley Also Send Words of Regret.

Baltimore, Nov. 18 (AP).—Theodore Roosevelt, son of the late former President, is among many well-known men who have written Gov. Ritchie expressing disappointment at his defeat for a fifth term.

Roosevelt, himself once mentioned as a Republican candidate for the Presidency, asserted had he lived in Maryland he would have spoken and voted for Ritchie, a Democrat.

Others writing the defeated Maryland Governor included: Former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York; James A. Farley, national Democratic chairman; Bernard M. Baruch, New York financier, and Dr. Samuel Harden Church, president of the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh.

Expresses Disappointment.

Theodore Roosevelt's letter, mailed from his home at Oyster Bay, said:

"I am bitterly disappointed with the result in Maryland—disappointed from the standpoint of the country. If I had been in Maryland I would have spoken for you and voted for you. * * *

"I want most sincerely to congratulate you on your splendid patriotic service to our people and the country."

"Al" Smith's letter follows:

"I can not tell you how much I regret the last news from Maryland. I was glad to be rid of the governorship of New York. Maybe you are better off. A man once wrote to me and said: 'I should think you would be happy to be relieved of the irritating duties of the governorship.' If I tried for a month I couldn't think of a more appropriate phrase.

"All the family joins me in best wishes and if you come near New York I will be happy to see you."

Ritchie's Reply.

To this Gov. Ritchie replied:

"I deeply appreciate your favor. I am afraid it is a little too soon for me to feel particularly happy about the result, but maybe you are right. It will give me the greatest pleasure to see you when I next come to New York. I will probably have plenty of time to visit around during the next four years."

Farley wrote:

"I received your wire acknowledging receipt of my wire of congratulations which evidently, according to the returns, was, as Mark Twain once said, premature. I was terribly disappointed, Bert, because I felt certain you were going to win. However, that is part of politics and we have to take the bitter with the sweet."

Fleeing Man, Shot By Sheriff, Dies

Clear Springs Victim Was Evading Arrest.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—Nathan Lucas, 23, of Clear Springs, wounded in the abdomen when he fled Thursday night from two deputy sheriffs who had just served him with a warrant charging illegal sale of liquor, died late today at the Washington County Hospital here.

Deputy Sheriff Robert Taylor told States Attorney Lloyd Harshman that he fired into the air to frighten Lucas, the bullet striking him because he was running up a hill back of the Lucas home.

Harshman stated that he was convinced that the shooting was an "unfortunate occurrence" and that the officer acted in line of duty. He indicated there would be no action taken against Taylor.

"Caravan," a New Fox Musical Production, Will Open Tomorrow at RKO-Keith's

Will Dislodge Dickens' Play As Major Film

"Great Expectations" Out; Eleanor Powell Signed; About the Showshops.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Perpetuating his cherished reputation as the incomparable upsetter of schedules, among the showmen of the National Capital, Manager Hardie Meakin, whose acumen is relied upon for the perspicacious guidance of the destinies of RKO-Keith's Theater, just around the corner there on Fifteenth street, announces with all the complace bred of long habit that he will break out a new bill tomorrow.

The newest cinematographic object of Mr. Meakin's enthusiasm is an item by Fox, known as "Caravan." It will succeed Mr. Dickens' "Great Expectations" as Fifteenth street's chief claim to theatrical attention, come approximately 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Three-in-One Film.

"Caravan" is by way of being several pictures in one, according to advance report—not supplied by Meakin.

In plot, it is said to be a light dramatic romance that builds eventually to a triangle situation not wholly unknown to the theater. In locale, settings and background, someone has said that it bears a close resemblance to an educational travelogue. Musically, it is a colorful operetta, combining sentimental songs, "hot" modern numbers and stirring martial airs—all variegated by vocal, instrumental, solo and choral treatment.

"Caravan" is the first American production directed by Erik Charell, the man who made "Congress Dances."

Boyer Stars First Time.

Charles Boyer, whom a vague memory seems to identify as the husband of Pat Paterson, is the star of the film. He is surrounded by a notable list of native and popular imported players, among them Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes, Louise Fazenda—and where has she been all these months?—Eugene Pallette, C. Aubrey Smith, Charlie Grapewin, of the old vaudeville team of Charlie Grapewin and Anna Chance; Noah Beery, Dudley Digges, Lionel Belmore, Richard Carle, Billy Bevan and Armand Kaliz.

The place and time of the story, unless you turned that last corner, are rural Hungary and the celebration of the grape harvest.

Further particularization, I am beginning to suspect, will have to go over until Wednesday morning in this space—or nearby.

It is not with complete and bewildering astonishment that one contemplates the departure of "Great Expectations" after a run of only four days.

As was remarked here last Wednesday, following the picture's preview at a private screening on Tuesday, its plot was abstruse and heavy-footed in the early sequences and the entire fashion of the story one that lent itself with less facility to the screen that numerous others of the same author's works that might be named.

There was occasion, however, to place rather more implicit faith in the supposedly strong ances offered by Henry Hull, public appeal of the perform- George Breakston and one or two others in the cast than subsequent events seem to have justified.

What actually is at the bottom of it all, probably, is an overconfidence on the part of producer, exhibitor and the critics that there are still a great army of readers of Dickens in the world. Perhaps there are, but they seem not to be numbered among the most ardent supporters of the cinema!

Signed for New One.

Eleanor Powell, that incomparable ta-dancer recently seen in a headline spot on one of the stage bills at Loew's Fox Theater, has been engaged for a featured role in the forthcoming musical production, "Going Places and Doing Sings," which the Messrs. Shubert will present shortly after the first of the year.

As a matter of fact, Miss Powell is the only member of the cast, so far, who has been engaged for this new revue by Raymond Knight, a writer for radio when pursuing his regular occupation. The names of the composers, even, have not been announced, if, as yet, they have been decided upon.

Unlike their big revue hit, "Life Begins at 8:40," at the Winter Garden, the new musical will be of the intimate type and will be offered in one of the smaller Shubert theaters in New York.

In the meantime, Miss Powell is articled to journey to the West Coast shortly to make one picture. Upon its completion, she will return to Broadway to begin rehearsals in the new piece whose title looks like a misprint, but isn't. That would be early in January, according to present estimates.

When the hour arrived for Burton Holmes' travel talk on "Soviet Russia," in the National Theater yesterday afternoon at 3, two box offices were in full operation, selling two lines of customers that wound out of the lobby and curled themselves into two impressive queues under the theater's expansive marquee. It was after 3:30 when the last of the cash customers was seated. The lecture, of which something will be found in another column, was worth the attention it attracted and, I reiterate, should be repeated before the Holmes' season is over.

Plan Second Season.

It is that alert and erudite student of the theater in all of its ramifications, Mr. Oliver M. Sayler, who passes along the word that ambitious plans for the second season of African Dancers, Inc., the group which became the talk of New York with its production of "Kykunkor" last spring and early summer, have just been announced by Ann Kennedy, who originally discovered this native African company of artists and introduced them to the New York public interested in dance and lyric drama.

The second season, according to Miss Kennedy, will begin late this month or early in December in a theater which is still in process of negotiation, and which will be announced within a fwe days.

The season will begin with a wholly new production of an entirely new version of "Kykunkor," which will be followed by another production from native African sources, under the direction of Asadata Dafora, the founder and organizer of the group and its leading performer.

Later, these two productions will be presented in repertory fashion, preceding a long tour of the country which is now being booked by Mr. Sayler, in association with Charles Wagner, in answer to numerous requests, which have been coming to Miss Kennedy ever since the successful engagements of "Kykunkor" last season.

Washington, Mr. Sayler?

Dots and Dashes.

"The Painted Veil," latest vehicle —and some say best—for Greta Garbo, was screened backstage at Loew's Fox last night at 9 . . . A matter in which this department was accorded no benefit whatever by Burton Holmes, this column, some art, a mess of captions, "Straight From Hollywood," Film Tables and a few other details of minor importance . . . This is the picture in which Garbo is supported by both Herbert Marshall and George Brent . . . Much, they say, to the romantic interest of all concerned . . . It was directed by Richard Boleslavsky from the story by W. Somerset Maugham . . . Hope I see it sometime! . . . "The Road to Yesterday," one of the most popular of Rida Johnson Young's romances of an earlier theater, is being revived by the Dramatic Club of Tech High, on Friday and Saturday of this week at 8 p. m., in the school auditorium, Second and T streets northeast . . . Verna Volz, Maxine Kahn and Amanda Chittum have been selected for the leading roles in "The Torch-Bearer," first production of the year of Cue and Curtain, the dramatic organization of George Washintgon University . . . Wardman Park Theater, in December . . . With Anton Hardt directing . . . That modest little chap sitting next to Johnny Davis, who steals most of the spotlight from the brass section of Waring's Pennsylvanians, at the Earle, is Nels Keller . . . He has been with the band from the outset . . . And can he toot a trumpet! . . . Scotty Bates, the juvenile comic, Fred picked up on the Coast during one of the orchestra's long stays out there, making musical comedies with Dorothy Lee . . . She would be the kid in all of the Wheeler and Woolsey screen plays and personal stage appearances . . . That is, I suppose she would be . . . She always has been! . . . Lawrence Tibbett sang Bill Handy's "St. Louis Blues" over the air recently and explained to his invisible audience that Duke Ellington played the number before an audience of serious music lovers in Paris and they loved it . . . Maybe I'm wrong!

Call-It-Even Note.

"However, I have been going for Ellington's "Mood Indigo," the time when "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," in a big way, lately.

They've got me whipped, so just let "that evenin' sun go down" by itself, if you don't mind!

First Actor Addresses Aspirants to Stardom

Before concluding his record engagement in Eugene O'Neill's play of "Ah, Wilderness," in the National Theater last week, George M. Cohan, "first actor of the American theater," found time before the Saturday matinee to address the student body at the Clifford Brooke Academy of Stage Training in the Dramatic Arts. Mr. Cohan, seated, right center, talked to a group of 50 potential future stars of the stage for three-quarters of an hour, stressing in his remarks that the theater is a serious business, not to be taken lightly. Stephen E. Cochran, manager of the National and president of the academy, is standing, center.

Straight From the Studios

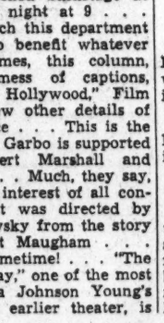
By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, Nov. 18.—The battle of the British for a place in the cinema sun takes on a new complexion from day to day. Now it is color. The British have a new process called color-gravure which is to be used in filming "Joseph and His Brethren," the biblical subject which is to be modernized for the screen.



JOHN BARRYMORE.

John Barrymore will be the leading figure in the cast, the film to be produced by Alexander Korda for London Films.

The interesting thing about this new process is that it is little more expensive than regular black and white photography. This initial production is somewhat of an experiment, but other films are expected to follow. Color has been the talk of Hollywood for some time and it seems the British are not far behind.

New Marx Stunt For Next Film.

Something fascinatingly new will be injected into the next Marx Brothers film, "A Night at the Opera." Two feminine Marx Brothers impersonators are being scouted for the picture. They are Russian actresses who appeared with Harpo Marx while he was in Russia. A government contest was conducted at that time and they were chosen to take part in a playlet with the silent comedian. Their names are Helen Ketatk and Iona Brotsky, one appeared as Groucho and the other as Chico. Now it is felt that it might be a good idea to have them in the new picture, probably doing stunts similar to the ones they performed on the Russian stage.

Latest Musical Note.

Almost any subject suggesting musical interest is being captured by the studios today. Charles Ruggles is now planning a production based on the life of John Gay, author of "The Beggar's Opera," which had such a vogue 10 or 12 years ago and remained in favor for several seasons.

Naturally the "Beggar's Opera" melodies will be incorporated and the more interesting portions of the action will be given. It seems more and more that biographical stories of composers will be brought to the screen as a means of presenting some of their music.

Films Going Crazy.

A prominent psychiatrist, Dr. Marcus, has been signed as technical director for the picture, "Private Worlds," to insure correctness in portrayal of types appearing in the insane asylum sequences. This is the first instance of this kind in a long time. The picture is daring in undertaking to represent what goes on in a hospital for the mentally ill. Dr. Marcus has been associated with several English hospitals for nervous diseases, and was a major in the United States Army during the World War.

Able Trio Assigned.

Genevieve Tobin, Verree Teasdale and John Eldredge will be seen together in "The Goose and the Gander," an original written by Charles Kenyon. Miss Teasdale's career has been brightened considerably since she played in "Du-Barry" with Dolores Del Rio, and she has an effective role in this new picture. Miss Tobin also is brilliantly cast in the film, which is of the comedy-drama type. Eldredge is regarded as a "find" since he made an impression in "Flirtation Walk."

BurtonHolmes' 'Soviet Russia' Draws Capacity

First Travel Talk Attracts His Biggest Crowd Since 1929 at the National.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Reportorial in style, nonpartisan rather than controversial and as minutely informative as the rigid governmental inhibitions placed upon "intourist" photographers will permit, Burton Holmes' travel talk on "Soviet Russia" yesterday afternoon attracted the largest audience to the National Theater that has attended one of this distinguished globe-trotter's illustrated lectures in the National Capital since the "crash" year of 1929.

Prefacing his recitation of what he found in the U. S. S. R. last spring and summer with a brief survey of the many superior aspects of our own form of government, interlacing another brief visit to his Hollywood hilltop home —Topside—and gazing again out of those familiar windows of his high New York apartment overlooking Central Park, the speaker launched into the real substance of his engrossing remarks upon arrival in the "magnified Moscow of today."

Extensive and Intensive Scrutiny.

The extensive tour of present-day Russia and the intensive examination of its tremendously fascinating experiment in human destiny then progressed methodically up and down and across the "Empire of all the Russias," that was, from Moscow to Leningrad and the Crimea and from the dreary battlefield of Balaklava, where rode the 600, to the "Russian Riviera" along the fringes of the Black Sea and back again to Moscow for the overpowering spectacle of "May Day." Palaces, hovels, museums, hospitals, cities, villages and metropolises, all were included.

In the course of his disclosures, Mr. Holmes was frank in his emphasis of the improved housing, food, service and courtesy afforded the intourist during the past three years.

Much of his pictorial material, perforce, dated back to an earlier tour in the Czaristic days of 1901. There can be no gainsaying the visual evidences of a vast economic improvement in the status of the proletariat in the meantime.

Should Be Repeated.

With the Russian state's effort to stamp out religious worship, Mr. Holmes obviously has no patience—as who has? For its exuberant vigor in promoting some of the world's most fabulous industrial and commercial projects, she quite as patently holds the deepest admiration. For the magnitude of the experiment, he has profound respect.

It is regrettable that so much of the pictorial portion of this splendid talk must date back so far into the past—regrettable, that is, until these resurrected achievements of earlier tours bring to the screen in motion, Czar Nicholas II, in closeup; his Empress and their family; Count Leo Tolstoi, with his family at their summer home, Maxim Gorky, Stalin and other vital figures, known only vaguely to the mass of Americans.

This is one of Burton Holmes' most comprehensive lectures—illuminating, unprejudiced and forceful—on a topic of livest world interest. It is suggested that it will bear repetition before his new season at the National is concluded, if that can be arranged, to response no less enthusiastic than yesterday's.

"THE GIRLS FROM THE FOLLIES." Independent Burlesque Association presentation in two acts and 26 scenes, with Harry Harrigan, Joe Stanley, Frank O'Neil, Bert Grant, Richard Brooks, Jean Bodine, Joy St. Claire, Helen Green, Peggy Delmar and Dorothy Ahearn. Book by Gus Flagg; dance routines by Regina Windsor. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

Even with names such as Dorothy Ahearn, Joy St. Clair and Jean Bodine, with which to conjure, "The Girls From the Follies" falls something short of sensationally exciting entertainment.

"The Girls From the Follies" simply does not have the material out of which to formulate a presentation which can even approximate the high average of the Independent Burlesque Association. Although the three charming misses aforementioned are outstanding in a particularly dull show, yet even they seem to be afflicted with an unwonted lassitude.

The comics—Harry Harrigan, dialectician, and Joe Stanley, deadpanner—work hard to put over a book of gags that Gus Flagg forgot to write. The skits are draggy, and the farceurs, with Frank O'Neil, Bert Grant and Richard Brooks, as the straight men, are beset no end with difficulties.

If an unqualified word of commendation is to be offered, it must be given Impresario James J. Lake for his customary good taste in colorfully staging the opus. Indeed, "Col. Jimmie" makes a good show better, and a poor show somewhat good.

Benny Ties the Rope Too Loosely

Everybody knows that when people get very old, nearly all of them become what young people call childish. They get real young again in their thoughts, and they dearly love to play with their grandchildren.

You remember that big sycamore tree that stands right close to the lake, and has some of its limbs running away out over the water. Every day when Bettie wasn't using her long clothesline that Blackie had brought up in Mr. Man's wagon, the children would beg her to let them use it for a swing, and Benny would climb away up in a tree, and tie it to a big limb. So this morning the swing was hard at work, and when Benny got tired of swinging Jenny, and said so, Grandpa, just to show how young he was, told Benny that he would push her and let him rest. After Grandpa had given her several nice pushes, she said to him: "I'm sorry that you are too old to swing, Grandpa; it's lots of fun."

"I'd like to know who said I was too old to swing. If you think you can push me a little, just get out of there, and I'll show you how to do some real swinging."

And so Grandpa took his seat in the swing and Jenny would swing him right easy, just like she was afraid he would fall out. "Don't you be afraid to swing me," said Grandpa. "Give her a push." And Jenny did just that. In fact, she gave him several pushes, and kept him so busy holding on that he didn't see Benny climbing up where the rope was tied to the limb. Then she most "let the cat die" before she said, "Now hold on good, for I am going to give you a good push." That was to tell Benny when to attend to his business up on the limb. And now here comes Jenny pushing as fast as she can run, and she shoves the swing so high that she runs under it and nearly gets into the water before she can stop. At that very same second Benny snatches loose the knot that is holding the rope to the tree, so there is nothing to pull the swing back, and it keeps going on out over the water, and so does Grandpa. When he comes down and hits that water it pops as loud as when the children are playing around the edges and slap a board down on the water.

When Benny turned the rope loose up on the limb he had to do some fast sliding to be back on the ground, lying where Grandpa had last seen him. Then the old fellow dragged himself out of the water and said: "Benny, you had better be more careful about tying the rope to the limb next time. Jenny might have fallen in the water."

Wilson-Furr Rated Even Tonight

Wilson Handlers Forecast Knockout; Bout Stirs D. C. Fans.

BOB WILSON and Phil Furr, Washington's two most colorful welterweights, will settle tonight at the Riding and Hunt Club, a question of supremacy that has created much "hot stove league" discussion among the fistic-minded of the Capital.

Not since Goldie Ahearn and Al Foreman fought their "Battle of the Potomac" at Kenilworth in 1926 has an encounter created greater local interest.

Possibly because of the 10-round distance, which is believed to be to his advantage, Furr has been installed in some quarters a slight favorite in the betting, such as it is. The gambling gentry do not favor Furr to the extent of laying odds on him, but their favoritism is shown in the large amounts of money available to be wagered on him and the comparatively little Wilson money ready to be risked.

Cite Long Lay-Off.

Many who believed Furr might have defeated Wilson had he fought him at the time the bout originally was scheduled, now think that the long lay-off has injured his chances. When Furr decided several months ago not to go through with the contest, he trained to his physical peak. Many discredit his claim of an injured hand, which he averred prevented him from going through with the fight when first scheduled.

Furr's handlers insist that he is now in the best shape possible. They point out that he was greatly underweight when he fought Ray Bowen and believe he now is at his best fighting weight—about 145 or 146 pounds.

Wilson's handlers are expressing great confidence in the ability of their charge to knock out Furr. Patsy Donovan, comanager of the pink-topped transplanted Floridian, is confident the bout won't go five rounds.

"It will take Bob somewhere between two and four rounds to find Furr's jaw," Donovan said last night. "If we had thought there was going to be any doubt about his stopping Furr, we would have held out for the 12-round distance we first asked for. If the bout was scheduled for six rounds, the outcome would be the same—Wilson would win by a knockout with a round or two to spare."

An interesting supporting card has been arranged.

In a six-round semifinal, Sid Silas and Pete Bevans will tangle. Billy Bullock and Young Raspi are carded in a six-round preliminary.

In three fours, Joe Firrone will meet Pete DeMaggio, Sammy Sweet will tackle Al Dintaman, and Jake Hudson will oppose Henry Irving.

Post Predictions.

Bouts are rated from A (the best) to G (the worst).

MAIN EVENT—Bob Wilson, Washington, vs. Phil Furr, Washington, welterweights; 10 rounds. Rated B. Wilson punches the hardest and sometime during the 10 rounds he should land, therefore—Wilson by a knockout.

SEMIFINALS—Sid Silas, New York, vs. Pete Bevans, Washington, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated D. Silas should outfumble Bevans.

PRELIMINARIES—Billy Bullock, Washington, vs. Young Raspi, Baltimore, lightweights. Rated C. Bullock to outsmart Raspi.

Sammy Sweet, Cincinnati, vs. Al Dintaman, Washington, bantamweight; 4 rounds. Rated C. Sweet.

Joe Pirrone, New York, vs. Pete Di Maggio, Baltimore, welterweights; 4 rounds. Rated C. Pirrone.

Jake Hudson, Baltimore, vs. Henry Irving, Washington, lightheavies; 4 rounds. Rated D. Irving.

Maryland and Georgetown Pointing

Saturday Brings Renewal of Old Rivalry at College Park.

THE Maryland-Georgetown game, which, it is hoped, will be an annual fixture on the District's football calendar, will be revived Saturday at College Park.

It will be the first grid skirmish between the two since 1907 when the Hoyas won, 10 to 0. In all, the schools battled—and they battled in those days—a half dozen times, and Georgetown took all the marbles.

Football relations between the schools arbitrarily were severed after 1907, because Georgetown wanted competition and Maryland wanted peace, but the schools continued to meet in baseball and other sports until 1920, when an unhappy accident in a baseball game led to hot verbal exchanges and ultimately a rupture in athletic relations.

Vic Keane, who later starred with the Chicago Cubs in the National League, suffered a broken leg attempting to tag Bill Kenyon, of Georgetown, at the plate, and Maryland supporters immediately raised the cry of poor sportsmanship.

Has Four Victories.

It is significant that Maryland is ascending the top of the grid ladder while Georgetown is just regaining its composure after three bitter years of want and hardship on the exchequer. Maryland has one of its finest teams this year and the Hilltoppers have rallied in admirable fashion to the new coaching standard of Jack Hagerty, its star quarter back of '22.

Maryland, defeated yesterday by Indiana in a thrill-soaked scramble for points, holds decisions over V. M. I., Virginia, St. John's and V. P. I. It was stopped by Navy, 16-13, and Washington and Lee, 7-0.

Georgetown, tied by New York U., 0-0, and nosed out by Richmond, 14-13, defeated Mount St. Mary's, Manhattan, William and Mary and Roanoke. Conceded only an outside chance of breaking even on their schedule, the Hoyas have surprised their most enthusiastic supporters.

On a basis of past performances Maryland must be given preference over its rival. The odds are 2-1 in the Old Line's favor as the teams buckle down to preparations for the game, but Georgetown will not want for support, morally or financially, and by game time there will be only a shade of difference between them—in wagering.

Trojan Victory Grid Feature On Coast

Routing of Oregon, 33-0, Biggest Upset; Oregon State Tied, 7-7.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 18 (AP).—To the greatest upset season in the history of Far Western football were added two more reversals today.

Mid-November's gridiron battles yesterday saw the once unbeatable Southern California Trojans win their first Pacific Coast Conference game of the season from a University of Oregon team. The ability of the Trojans to run up 33 points, meanwhile holding Oregon to none, was more surprising than the outcome itself. Not even the most enthusiastic Southern California supporters looked for a field day at the expense of a team which until then had won four games and lost one in the conference.

More surprising even than the Trojan comeback was the feat of the University of Montana in holding Oregon State to a 7-to-7 tie. Neither team has won a conference game and each has lost four, but the former's feat of holding U. S. C. to a tie and giving Oregon a close tussle necessarily earned it the role of favorite. If there is such a thing as a "moral victory" it belongs to Montana.

60,000 See Bears Beat Giants, 10-9

Field Goal by Manders in Last 50 Seconds Wins in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP).—In the last 50 seconds of play, Jack Manders kicked a 24-yard field goal today to give the world champion Chicago Bears a 10 to 9 victory over the New York Giants before a record crowd of 60,000 in the Polo Grounds.

The victory was the Bears' tenth straight of the current professional campaign and enabled them to keep abreast of the Detroit Lions, who defeated St. Louis, in a tie for the leadership of the Western division of the league.

With the game apparently in the bag as the result of a touchdown by Ken Strong in the second period and a safety in the third chapter, the Giants were headed for their thirteenth successive triumph on their home field until Max Krause, reserve half back, fumbled on the Giants' 33.

Feathers Scores Goal.

A few minutes before Krause's fumble Beattie Feathers skirted the Giants' right end for 12 yards and a touchdown and Manders converted a placement for the extra point, bringing the Bears to within two points of the Giants, 7 to 9.

Big Link Lyman, a veteran pro performer, recovered Krause's fumble and then opened up a big hole for Manders to plunge to the Giants' 26. On the next three plays Manders and Bronko Nagurski advanced the sphere to the Giants' 16. When it was announced 50 seconds remained, the Bears went into a huddle, took positions with Manders back for a kick.

Bears' Line Holds.

The big Bear front line held like concrete, allowing Manders to take his time and boot the ball between the uprights. With Ken Strong carrying the ball most of the way behind Bo Molenda's blocking, the Giants threatened as the first period ended. The ball was on the Bears' three line and on the first play of the second Strong pushed it over.

Strong kicked off at the start of the half over the Bears' goal line. Corbett scooped up the ball and then fell behind the line and the Giants were given a safety and a 9-0 lead.

Gene Ronzani, broad-shouldered half back led the Bears in a 4-yard drive to a score in the fourth. On three plays he carried the ball to the Giant 12 and then Feathers trotted across the pay stripe.

Navy Forgets Pitt, Primes For Army

Annapolis Fans Loud in Praise of Panthers; "Breaks" Absent.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—Although forced to absorb an overwhelming defeat at the hands of Pittsburgh, Naval Academy gridders are by no means discouraged, and they are ready to settle down tomorrow for a grind of two weeks that will bring them to the peak of form for the supreme test with the West Point Cadets to be played in Philadelphia December 1.

For after all, the service struggle is the primary objective of the campaign and victory over the rival Cadets, which is confidently expected, will make the season a crowning success, coupled with the string of triumphs achieved.

There were some rabid fans who felt the Middies had an even chance to trim the Pitt Panthers, others figured that the chance of victory lay only in capitalizing on possible "breaks" but the Tars were hopelessly outclassed in the first place, and again there were none of the so-called "breaks."

Generals Take Conference Grid Lead

Duke Is Eliminated From Share in Honors by Loss to N. C.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 18 (AP).—North Carolina's Tar Heels gloated today over their first victory over Duke since 1929, a well-earned 7-to-0 triumph, but Washington and Lee's Generals apparently were the chief beneficiary in the Southern Conference championship race.

When Dick Buck took Don Jackson's short pass behind the goal line for the touchdown that whipped the Blue Devils, Washington and Lee became the only team in the circuit with a perfect record.

The Generals, favored by a schedule that included none of the Old North State's three powerful teams, have squeezed through without a defeat or tie and if they can get by South Carolina's Gamecocks on Thanksgiving Day they'll present an unmarred record in support of their championship claims.

Only Blemish a Tie.

It was a substitute sophomore guard who a few Saturdays ago kicked the perfect placement after N. C. State's touchdown that gave the Wolfpack a 7-7 tie with the Tar Heels and placed the only blemish on North Carolina's Southern Conference slate.

Although they didn't score until the fourth period, the Tar Heels left no doubt of their superiority over Duke.

While the Tarheels were toppling Duke, Washington and Lee packed away the Old Dominion championship by whipping William and Mary, 7 to 0. The Indians had the ball in Washington and Lee territory in the fourth period when Charley Smith, an end, intercepted a William and Mary pass and raced 71 yards for the winning touchdown.

Placement Margin.

Maryland scored as many touchdowns as Indiana, but Reed Kelso's 30-yard placement kick provided the winning margin in the Hoosiers' 17-to-14 victory. In another wide-open game, in which an orthodox play was the exception rather than the rule, Davidson turned back V. M. I.'s Cadets, 27 to 13.

The Southeastern won the "rubber" game in the season's series with the Southern Conference as Georgia overpowered N. C. State in the second half to win, 27 to 0.

V. P. I. Victor, 19 to 6.

Virginia Tech, another eleven that would be in there fighting for a chance at the Virginia State title but for its single reverse, found Virginia more stubborn than had been anticipated. With Toots Dickerson's quick kicks helping them, the Techmen scored a 19-to-6 victory.

All other Old Dominion teams, with the exception of Bridgewater's hapless Eagles, who took a 63-to-0 trimming from Juniata, scored victories. Emory and Henry ended the season with a 12-to-0 triumph over Chattanooga, Hampden-Sydney defeated an outplayed Swarthmore eleven, 7 to 6; Randolph-Macon trimmed Gallaudet, 18 to 6, and Roanoke rolled over Baltimore, 32 to 7.

Tickets to Army-Navy Game Offered in Postilion Contest

Tickets to the season's outstanding grid classic—the Army-Navy game at Franklin Field in Philadelphia December 1—will be awarded the winners of this week's Postilion Football Contest.

To the winner of this contest will be given four choice seats to the gridiron masterpiece. The contestant finishing second will be awarded three choice seats and the third place winner will receive two tickets.

Below is a list of 26 games selected by Shirley L. Povich, Sports Editor of The Post, as the week's most important games. The winner will be the contestant who predicts correctly the outcome of the greatest number of games.

In case of a tie, priority of receipt will determine the winner. If any two contestants are tied on the number of games predicted correctly and their entries are received at the same time, the entrant who has given probable scores will be adjudged the winner.

The blank below is for your convenience, but it is not necessary to use The Post chart to file entry.

On Saturday night, Harris B. Hull, the Postilion broadcaster, will include scores of the games on his regular broadcast over Station WMAL. The winners will be announced in The Post next Monday morning.

Princeton Rose Bowl Question Is Answered by Yale's "No"

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (Spl.).—Rose Bowl! I hear you calling me . . . or, rather, I do not hear you calling me. Four more great universities, Princeton, Navy, Syracuse and Illinois, excused themselves from the golden page boy from Pasadena this Saturday past. It must in a way come as a great relief to Princeton not to have to worry any more as to whether it has a team of Rose Bowl caliber and whether it would have won from Stanford had it been invited and had it accepted the invitation. All of these intriguing hypothetical questions will no longer trouble Princeton heads on their pillows at night. The answer is "no."

A lot of the more expert experts, to which group I regrettably do not belong, have been opining all the season that the Tiger football team was not as hot as it sounded. Among those was Mr. George Marshall, proprietor of the Boston Red-

Four Teams Trampled 1st Time

Tide Now Appears to Be Odds-On Choice for Bowl Bid.

DUE mainly to a violent outburst of football fratricide in the East, featuring the highly dramatic conquest of Yale's amazing "Iron Men" over Princeton and including, all told, the abrupt demise of three notable winning streaks, the seemingly irresistible gridiron forces of Minnesota and Alabama stand alone today as the only major college aggregations neither beaten nor tied, according to the Associated Press.

The consequence is that Alabama's Crimson Tide now seems the odds-on choice to thunder along to the Rose Bowl and collide with Stanford's powerhouse in the annual New Year's Day intersectional classic, unless some unexpected, eleventh-hour means can be found for the galloping Gophers to hurdle the Big Ten barrier to post-season activity.

Minnesota, by something approaching popular acclamation, remains the Nation's No. 1 college football team, but there's no prospect of proving it to the complete satisfaction of those offering rebuttals in behalf of the few surviving unbeaten teams of the South and Far West.

Dreams Shattered.

Championship dreams were rudely shattered Saturday for four major teams with spotless records. Yale's eleven "Iron Men," playing the entire game without a single substitution, achieved the most startling Eastern upset in years by overthrowing Princeton, 7 to 0, thereby ending a 15-game winning streak for the Tigers. Syracuse, unable to capitalize on its superior power, had its Rose Bowl hopes blasted by Colgate's seventh straight victory over the Orange forces, 13 to 3. Navy, outclassed by the mighty Pittsburgh Panthers, came toppling from its high perch to the lopsided tune of 31 to 7.

Meanwhile, Illinois was knocked from the Big Ten race as well as out of the unbeaten class by a 7-3 comeback victory for Wisconsin, which now offers the only remaining barrier to Minnesota's "unstoppables." Cornell added to the East's spectacular developments by surging back to trounce Dartmouth, 21 to 6, after losing four straight games.

Well Out in Front.

Only a handful of major teams remain in the race for national championship honors, with Minnesota and Alabama still well out in front as the result of their latest conquests, gained in typically smashing style. While the Gophers were basting Chicago, 35 to 7, with Stan Kostka and Pug Lund setting a terrific pace, the Crimson Tide rolled over Georgia Tech, 40 to 0, with the aid of a deadly barrage of Howell-to-Hutson passes. Vanderbilt is now the only obstacle in the path of another Alabama jaunt to the Rose Bowl and it doesn't seem likely the Commodores can check the terrible Southern tidal wave.

Stanford and Rice, each dominant so far in their respective zones of combat, loom foremost among the teams that have been tied but not defeated. Although Temple, Santa Clara, Louisiana State and the Utah Aggies enjoy the same status in the standing of the major "clubs."

Stanford this week faces the "big game" with California and the Golden Bears served notice they will be no set-up by the way they mauled Idaho, 45 to 13, Saturday, while Stanford was tuning up with a 40-0 victory over the Olympic club.

One Defeat Each.

No rating of the teams or any discussion of the outstanding aggregations is complete, however, without taking Pittsburgh, Ohio State and Colgate into account. Each of this trio has tasted one bitter defeat, but they can't be ignored on that account. While Pitt and Colgate were demolishing a pair of winning streaks Saturday, Ohio State enjoyed a historic field day at the expense of the battered Wolverines of Michigan. The 34-0 triumph of the Buckeyes, most sweeping they have ever gained over Michigan, marked a new "low" for the Wolverines, who have now lost all five of their Big Ten games and six out of seven contests played this season.

Meanwhile, football's underdogs all over the country can take fresh inspiration from Yale's victory, which must be put down as one of the finest team and coaching achievements in years. The Elis exploded the bubble of Princeton invincibility in the Tigers' own lair, in full view of 52,000 astounded spectators and with an "iron man" team that was a throwback to the good old days when the only way they could get a player off the field was to carry him off. The avalanche of Princeton man-power thundered twice, but was rolled back by the boys in blue, who fought savagely and successfully to protect the lead gained on a 41-yard touchdown pass from Jerry Roscoe to Larry Kelley, a rangy ball-hawk, who dashed 25 yards through most of the bewildered Tiger team to score

Fernwood A. C. Tops German Soccerites

Triumphs, 5-3, With Rally in Last 15 Minutes of Close Game.

WITH a whirlwind finish, Fernwood A. C., of Baltimore, defeated the German Americans in a Southeastern Semi-pro Soccer League game yesterday, 5 to 3.

The battle was nip-and-tuck up until the last 15 minutes when the Fernwood team, led by Heinlein, center, and Green, center half, ran up two points for its margin of victory. Heinlein accounted for two goals during the game.

At half time the score was 2-all. Blanche and Mitchell were outstanding for the locals. McBain's injury late in the second half weakened the Germans' defense considerably.

Frederick Wins Sixth Straight

Frederick, Md., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—Frederick Athletic Club defeated Highlandtown (Baltimore) Wildcats before a large crowd at McCurdy Field this afternoon, 6 to 0. The game was one of the best of the season and marked Frederick's sixth consecutive win. Frederick scored its only touchdown midway first period when Byrne intercepted a pass and ran 35 yards to Highlandtown's 20-yard line. Clark, Barry and Byrne on three plays then made a first down on Highlandtown's 8-yard line. Three more plays carried the ball to the visitors' 2-yard line and Barry crashed through center for a touchdown.

Highlandtown threatened in the second period when a blocked kick was recovered and a pass brought the ball to Frederick's 4-yard line. On the next play, Steele broke through center and recovered the ball on Frederick's 1-yard line. Highlandtown started a passing attack toward the end of the fourth period and worked the ball to Frederick's 20-yard line. As Ropp intercepted a pass on Highlandtown's 6-yard line the whistle blew.

Potential Cavalcades Are Expected at Mrs. Somerville's Breeding Farm in Spring

Lancegaye's Get Eagerly Awaited

Tambour Among Stars Bred to Sire of Derby Winner.

WITH luck there should be one or more potential Cavalcades at Montpelier Farm next spring, for 11 of Mrs. Thomas H. Somerville's fine mares and one belonging to Preston Burch, her trainer until a couple of seasons back, are expecting the stork during the winter and the sire of whatever they may produce will be Lancegaye, daddy of the winner of the Kentucky, American and Detroit Derbies, the Arlington Classic and the Chesapeake stakes of the season past, and the outstanding figure of the current season's American racing.

Montpelier, in Orange County, is one of the historic estates of the Virginia Piedmont. For 30-odd years of the first half of the last century it was the home of James Madison, fourth president of the United States, cofounder with Thomas Jefferson, whose Monticello plantation, of Albermarle County, is not far away. Madison built the stately mansion which is its center and which Mrs. Somerville, who inherited it from her father, the late William du Pont, of Delaware, has restored to its old gracious splendor, while, at the same time, she has been organizing a stud that will figure big in American thoroughbred production in the immediate future.

Lancegaye Heads Stud.

Lancegaye, a son of Swynford and Flying Spear (she by Spearmint from Gallopalong), is the head of the Somerville stud and Hydrome1, a son of Light Brigade and Honeydew, she by Ben Brush, is his satellite. Lancegaye, whose fame as a stock horse the brilliant Cavalcade has securely established, is a recent importation from England.

Johnson N. Camden bred Hydrome1, a horse of homeric proportions and a racer of parts not so very long ago. Mrs. Somerville bought him at the dispersal sale of Camden's Hartland stud two years back because of his seeming fitness to sire jumpers. Jumpers brought Mrs. Somerville, one of the most accomplished horsewomen of the Atlantic Seaboard's smartest set, into racing and production. She has been amazingly successful in hunting and steeplechasing, particularly with those sons of Man o' War, Annapolis and Battleship. Annapolis has won 20 jumping events in six seasons; Battleship, 21 in four. Abandoning his hunter's status in September, Battleship, which is well under 16 hands at the withers and not big for his height, won the 1934 revival of the Grand National—3 miles—America's greatest open steeplechase, over the stiff Belmont Park course.

Annapolis Recent Winner.

Annapolis, which is barely 15.1, won the Master of Foxhounds' Hunter's Chase, also 3 miles, at Pimlico the other day. Mrs. Somerville is just the sort to put a horse of the quality of Cavalcade at steeplechasing. But, probably, she won't try any of these coming sons and daughters of Lancegaye at jumping until she has given Selby Burch, Preston Burch's brother and her new trainer, a chance to see what he can do with them in flat racing.

Cavalcade, which Wallis Armstrong imported in utero and sold at the auction block at Saratoga in August, 1932, to Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloane, another Virginia producer, is as good a horse of English blood as American racing has seen. Reigh Count, nor Hourless, nor Omar Khayyam, nor War Cloud, nor Sysonby had anything on him. And he is still a racing factor.

Lancegaye was something of a performer himself in England in 1926, when he was 3. It took the redoubtable Coronach to beat him in the Column Produce Stakes, 1 mile, at Newmarket, also in the Derby that followed at Epsom and in the Derby, 1½ miles, he licked Colorado, Swift and Sure, Review Order, War Mist and 11 others.

Tambour Is Threeing.

The expectant mothers are Tambour, Lost Agnes, Ponova, Vilna 2d, Beloved, Miss Kilrane, Flattery, Jaina, Diane de Poitiers, Pink Lady, Chatter Anne and Whisker. The Tambour foal will belong to Preston Burch and, if it matures into the sort of horse its mother was, it will be mighty good. A daughter of General Thatcher and Castinet, Tambour won a Coaching Club American Oaks, renewals of the Delaware and Potomac handicaps and half a dozen other races. She was the best horse Burch, who is 30, ever owned.

Possibly the mare from which the best of these Lancegaye foals should be expected is Diane de Poitiers. A daughter of Teddy and Plucky Liege, Diane is an own sister of Sir Gallahad 3d, the sire of High Quest, Gallant Fox, Gallant Sir, Motto, Betty Derr, Insco, Ormesby, Sir Andrew, The Scout, Flying Gal, Happy Gal, Bongo, Hadagal, etc. Sir Gallahad 3d is one of the best stock horses of European blood that has served in this country.

It is of no significance that Diane de Poitiers did not distinguish herself as a race horse. Few remember having seen the mothers of Man o' War, Crusader, Fitz Herbert and Twenty Grand race, much less win. And there have been no bigger flops in production than Miss Woodford, Firenze, Imp, Beldame, Artful, Flying Fairy and Fair Star, top-hole racers all.

Par 4 Brings Medalist Victory

Vinson OutscoresShorey and Walper With 70 at Manor Club.

IN the tightest match he has played all season, Claude Rippy, medalist and favorite, defeated Volney Burnett in a tense 20-hole battle yesterday to reach the finals of the Rock Creek turkey golf tournament.

Rippy will meet the winner of today's match between Pat Axtell and Harold Bower, Anacostia's champion.

Both Rippy and Burnett scored 76's, with 36's on the outgoing nine. The match was all even at the turn, five of holes on the first nine being halved.

This hole-for-hole battle continued through the stretch, and they left the eighteenth all even. On the ninteenth each was on in two and down in two for his par. On the twentieth Rippy laced out two booming shots to reach the green comfortably in two and make his par 4, while Burnett dumped his second into a trap, overshot the green with his third, and scored a five.

Axtell and Bowers are to play at 11 a. m. Mrs. Florence Godfrey and Miss Betty Barber will clash today for the women's championship.

In the blind bogey at Manor the following tied with net 74's for first prize: W. J. Peters, 82—8—74; H. J. Neff, 82—8—74; B. C. Hartig, 88—14—74; G. E. Moore, 84—10—74; T. N. Beavers, 82—8—74; A. L. Alderman, 82—8—74; Harry Grier, 83—9—74. Tied for second were R. A. Kuntz, 93—13—80; D. M. McPherson, 102—22—80; B. C. Barnhard, 98—18—80; Brian Beall, 92—12—80.

Two well-known feminine members at Indian Spring Country Club used their irons to good advantage yesterday. Mrs. L. T. Powers holed out a 125-yard mashie for a birdie 4 on the 525-yard sixteenth—the toughest hole on the course. Mrs. E. B. Wagner and Mrs. George Diffenbaugh played with her. Mrs. T. S. Stone, playing with Mrs J. Franklin Gross and Mrs. L. H. Firey, saved herself pars by holing out a trap on the fourth for her 4, and knocking her approach from 75 yards into the cup on the eighteenth for another 4.

Playing his first full round in two weeks, Gene Vinson, District champion, shot a 70 at Manor, showing two pros, Mel Shorey, East Potomac, and Leo Walper, Bethesda, driving range professional, how to trim Old Man Par. Out in 34 and back in 36, with three-putt greens on the fifth, eleventh and thirteenth, Vinson clipped a stroke off par. Shorey had 73 and Walper 75.

Jimmy Thomson, winner of the $5,000 first prize in the Australian championship last week, learned a good bit of his golf while his dad, Wilfried, was professional at Burning Tree Club some ten years ago, golfers discussing his great victory, yesterday recalled. Thomson formerly attended Western High School, and became assistant to his dad, who was the pro at the Hermitage Country Club in Richmond.

Sleeper Pass Gives Annapolis Team Win

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—A sleeper pass in the last quarter followed by Fletcher's crack through center gave the Annapolis Coca Cola eleven, State title claimants, a 6 to 0 win over the Silver Spring Merchants today.

The battle was waged mainly between the respective 25-yard lines, neither team penetrating more than once in dangerous territory. George Bozievich's 45-yard end run in the second quarter was the invaders' only scoring threat.

Maryland A. C. And Marions Triumph

Champs Score Over Coast Artillery by 6 to 0; Gunners Routed.

MARIONS and Maryland A. C. opened the second half of the National City Semipro Football League with victories yesterday. Marions won a 6-0 thriller from 260th Coast Artillery at Bennings, while Maryland swamped Seaman Gunners, 45-0, at Duffy Stadium.

Ruddy Hughes, quarter back, proved the hero for Marions. He lunged through center from the 5-yard line late in the second quarter for a touchdown as the climax of a spirited 40-yard march. The game was a real dog fight, with both lines yielding grudgingly.

Willie Benner, former Tech High and Maryland University football ace, who also is quite adept at picking football scores, was the big noise for Maryland A. C. He scored four touchdowns with a great exhibition of kicking, running and passing.

Benner made his first touchdown on the opening play of the game, slashing off tackle 52 yards.

One of the features of the Marion-Artillery game was an 82-yard punt executed by Shore, Artillery quarter back. The ball was picked from his own 15-yard line, and rolled out on Marion's three.

In the preliminary to the Maryland-Gunners' game, Northeast Boys Club defeated St. Stephens, 7-0, to win the 150-pound league championship, while in the same loop Centennials won from Apaches, 13-7. Cecchini scored the winning touchdown for Boys Club in the second period.

In the 135-pound class, Brookland Coal Co. defeated S. W. Gordon's Market, 13-0, and Brookland Boys Club trimmed Georgetown Boys Club, 13-6.

San Francisco Held To Tie by Loyola

Los Angeles, Nov. 18 (AP).—Two strong defensive football teams, University of San Francisco and Loyola, staged a stubborn 0-0 tie battle today on the soggy Gilmore Stadium gridiron before 10,000.

Coach Tom Lieb's line stayed off San Frnacisco's last-minute rush to prevent a defeat. With only two minutes to go, Half Back Bacciarini broke away for 9 yards to the Loyola 36 after intercepting Lubishich's pass. On fourth down he threw a long pass intended for Bugge. Interference was called on the 13-yard line as the eligible receiver was cut down before he could handle the ball. With less than a minute to play Peterson stepped back to his 20 and attempted a place-kick that was low and wide.

St. Mary's 7-0 Victor Over Bronchos

Upset Santa Clara in Rain on Rival Fumble in Third Period.

SAN FRANCISO, Nov. 18 (AP).—St. Mary's Gaels continued their mastery over the Santa Clara Bronchos, 7-0, by virtue of a fumble recovered behind the Santa Clara goal line in their annual football game played in a driving rain today.

The break came as the Bronchos were attempting to kick out of danger in the third period.

Santa Clara had entered the game favored to beat the Gaels for the first time in 10 years.

The defeat dropped Santa Clara from the list of this year's undefeated elevens, although the Bronchos and Stanford played a 7-7 tie early in the season.

60,000 See Start.

More than half of the original crowd of 60,000 stuck around to see the Gaels make the winning play.

Fiese's punt went out of bounds on the Broncho 4-yard line and Sobrero, Bronc half, went back to punt out. He fumbled the wet ball and Pennino, Gael end, came through to fall on the ball behind the goal line. Kellogg, full back, converted.

Gael fumbles in the first half gave Santa Clara three chances to score, but each time penalties or the stout Gael defense halted the threat.

Rudy Dusek Gets Request —Three-Fall Christy Match

ACCEDING to public demand and the request of Rough Rudy, Promoter Joe Turner has agreed to allow the Rudy Dusek-Vic Christy wrestling match at the Auditorium Wednesday night to be settled ona two-falls-out-of-three basis.

"Too many flukey things happen in these one-fall matches," Dusek told Turner. "The only way to settle a bout is on a three-fall basis."

After much argument on the part of Dusek and several letters and telephone calls from wrestling enthusiasts, Turner agreed to place the new method on trial here.

"If the public likes the three-fall matches, they shall have 'em all the time," Turner said. "Whether we keep working on that basis or not depends entirely on how the people respond to the Wednesday night card."

The Dusek bout will elevate Christy to the ranks of main-event performers here. Valiant Vic gradually has climbed from the minor heart-throb class to the regular matinee-idol division of matdom so far as the feminine contingent of the local wrestle-minded is concerned.

Christy long ago became established as one of the best drawing cards on the Pacific Coast. He lured through the gates some of the largest gates ever recorded in California before making his debut here. It is Turner's fond hope that he will become as great a card in Washington as he was on the coast.

Hans Kampfer will tangle with Little Beaver in a bristling semi-final. In a 30-minute time-limit exhibition, Floyd Marshall will go to war against Charley Allen.

Irish Will Test Army Eleven Saturday

Game Headlines Schedule in East; Minnesota Faces Wisconsin.

FEW crucial battles are scheduled on the football front this week as many of the major combatants take a brief respite to gather strength for the grueling Thanksgiving Day skirmishes.

In the East, Army, still unbeaten, will undergo an analysis at the hands of Notre Dame that may indicate its chances against Navy in the annual service classic.

Minnesota will face a Wisconsin eleven fresh from a surprising upset of undefeated and untied Illinois in the Midwest's outstanding engagement.

With Alabama and Louisiana State idling, the South will have little to offer.

In the habitat of EPIC gubernatorial candidates, oranges and platinum blondes, California will do battle with Stanford.

Out in the great Southwest, where men are men and so are football players, skirmishes between Rice and Texas and Texas Christian and Baylor are scheduled.

Game to Test Army.

Army's possibilities against Navy should be more or less accurately determined in the Notre Dame game. The Middies squeezed out a close win over Elmer Layden's Fighting Irishers and should the Kaydets fail to show to as great advantage, they may find themselves on the short end of some long odds in the December 1 classic.

The Syracuse-Columbia contest promises some hard fought football. Yale will meet Harvard and Princeton will tackle Dartmouth in other colorful engagements to be held in the East.

Unbeaten and untied Minnesota will face an unknown quantity in Wisconsin. The Badgers, who had been buffeted about by Purdue, Notre Dame and Northwestern, showed surprising strength in defeating the Illini last Saturday. Should they bring into play against the Vikings the same spirit and determinatino, Coach Bernie Bierman's hopes of finishing the season with a spotless record may go aglimmering.

Illinois vs. Chicago.

Illinois will face Chicago, Purdue will meet Indiana and Michigan State will oppose Kansas in other Midwestern engagements.

Georgia against Auburn and Tulane opposing Sewanee is the best the South will have to offer.

Undefeated Stanford faces the oft-defeated California in the Pacific Coast's outstanding game. Washington and Washington State will battle it out for State supremacy. U. C. L. A. and Oregon State are slated in the remaining Pacific Coast contest.

Texas Christian is not generally expected to offer a great threat to the record of undefeated Rice and Southern Methodist will enter the fray against Baylor favorite in the Southwest sector.

Nebraska in Lead With Kansas State

Kansas City, Nov. 18 (AP).—Decisions rendered by the narrow margins of a safety and a field goal left Nebraska and Kansas State unbeaten in Big Six football rivalry today.

Held scoreless for three and one-half periods by the stubborn, defensive-minded Kansas Jayhawkers yesterday, Nebraska used a field goal from placement booted out of the mud by Virgil Yelkin, reserve end, to remain as the favorite to win the title again.

Kansas State came through with an 8-7 victory over Oklahoma with a touchdown made on a double lateral, Elder to Stoner to Quarter Back Dick Armstrong, and a safety when Dean Griffing, center, caught the injured Sooner tackle, Cash Gentry, trying to punt from behind his goal line. The defeat gave Oklahoma at least a tie for third place in the final standing.

Strutt Holds to Lead In U. S. Scoring Race

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Art Strutt, of Duquesne, and Bill Shepherd, of Western Maryland, still couldn't see the end of their race for the Eastern national individual football scoring lead today. They remained separated by just 2 points, with Strutt leading, 102 to 100, after both were held scoreless yesterday.

Baseball Men Gathering in Louisville

Hold Preliminary Session Today; Several Big Deals in Offing.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 18 (AP).—Sale and trade of players will be the most important business of executives gathering here for the convention of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues.

Many big deals are sure to be completed at the meeting, which will open Wednesday and end Friday. The attendance of 1,000 is expected to include representatives of every minor and major league in the United States as well as most of the game's leading stars.

American Association club officers will meet tomorrow in preliminary session. Transfer of the franchise of the St. Paul Club to a group of the city's business organizations and sport loving individuals is expected to be effected then. The trade has been arranged and awaits only the formal transfers of papers.

The association meeting will discuss merits of the play-off system of awarding the pennant, now in use.

A new contract with the International League for the Little World Series is on the agenda. The new agreement is expected to reduce the series from nine games to seven.

Judge W. G. Bramham, president of the association, will preside over the business sessions which begin Wednesday. The national convention routine program is expected to be light as there are few proposals for constitutional changes.

Schoolboys Outdraw Bay State Collegians

Boston, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Schoolboys outdrew the collegians in the Bay State yesterday.

Several schoolboy games drew crowds of about the same size, while the Haverhill-Lawrence and Malden-Everett feature games drew 13,000 and 12,000, respectively.

Stock Trading For Week Sets Record Pace

Turnover Heaviest Since Last July; Sales Up to 1,500,000 Shares.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Trading in stocks this week set the fastest pace since last July. Business returns indicated further slow improvement.

Progress in security markets was uneven. After its broad post-election advance, the share list retreated a little, influenced by declines in utilities and communications issues.

During the four full sessions transfers averaged more than a million shares a day, in contrast with the pre-election average of about half that. On Thursday Wall Street witnessed a 1,500,000-share session for the first time since July 27.

Public Interest Seen.

The activity was taken in brokerage quarters as evidence of broadening interest in stocks in consequence of Washington developments and hopes that business would get into a faster recovery stride.

The investment market continued to benefit from a movement of capital to the United States, as reflected in gold imports. Domestic and foreign government loans and high-grade corporation issues were in demand, but secondary bonds wavered with stocks.

The demand for high-grade investments and the inflow of capital relegated to the background the inflation talk which revived temporarily after the Democratic landslide at the polls. While commodities on the whole pointed upward again after an early autumn decline, leading staples did not undergo much change.

Utility Shares Sag.

Utility shares on the average sagged to the lowest levels of the year. Rails also lagged. Consolidated Gas was hard hit after a New York State Power Authority report on electricity costs, and American Telephone shares broke sharply on the Washington move for an investigation into the company's affairs.

Attention was focused on Government competition in the power industry by President Roosevelt's trip to the Tennessee Valley.

Market analysts inferred from the demand for such issues as motor, building and steel shares that buyers were looking forward to further improvement in those lines of industry over the next few months.

Evidence of Betterment.

Actual statistics afforded some evidence of betterment. From a low around 18 per cent of capacity early in September, steel operations have increased to more than 27 per cent, the American Iron & Steel Institute reports. A further gain of about 1 per cent in steel operations was reported for the week.

The year-to-year comparison continued to improve, since the business curve was still moving downward early in November, 1933. Railroad carloadings surpassed the comparable 1933 total for the first time since early July.

Electric power production was the second highest this year. Reports on retail trade continued quite cheerful, with some observers predicting the best holiday trade in several years.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Optimism Continues to Increase, but Business Analysts Still Question the Validity of the Basis Upon Which It Rests.

By Ralph Robey.

Confidence among business men that the Administration is now following a course which enhances the outlook for early recovery grew by leaps and bounds last week. On every side there were reports of developments foreshadowing a new "understanding," "reconciliation," a desire for "cooperation" between business leaders and Washington. Further, it was evident, nothing is to be permitted to stand in the way of the forward drive of this new policy of mutual helpfulness. Events that even a month ago would have been the cause of concern, were brushed aside as of no great importance. We are, to put it briefly, in an era of good feeling, and from this business is expected to derive the courage and strength to move with rapidity to higher levels.

As a matter of fact one already may discern such improvement, granting he shows some care in his selection of indicators. Last week—or the reports issued last week—the volume of carloadings rose above the figure of a year earlier for the first time in several weeks. Retails sales continued good, making new high records under the New Deal. And steel production continued the slow gradual betterment that has been going on in that industry for about a month. There also were favorable reports issued on the condition of agricultural income, on the volume of building, and on the demand for emergency financing under the HOLC. Even the stock market gathered momentum and enjoyed some of the heaviest trading in a long period, as well as higher prices, except for some divisions, notably public utilities, which suffered from the influence of adverse reports from Washington.

Various Other Factors On Favorable Side.

Even this list of cheerful items does not exhaust the field. The Secretary of the Treasury announced that henceforth limited exports of capital could be made without specific approval of the Government; a new head was appointed for the Federal Reserve Board, thereby presumably giving that organization a direction that it has not enjoyed for many weeks; the President announced that he does not want a complete social security program at this time, but only a program for unemployment insurance and even that to be covered by contributions rather than by taxes; and Senator Fletcher gave renewed assurance that he does not think there should be any important overhauling of the banking system this winter.

All of this has been interpreted by business men as assuring that the Administration definitely is committed to a policy of relatively orthodox economics. The increased freedom of capital movements is taken as an indication that there are no plans for further manipulation of the currency; the appointment of Mr. Eccles as governor of the Federal Reserve Board as evidence that, while a liberal financial policy will be followed by that organization, there will be no Administration attempt to nationalize the system or to bring the activities of our commercial banks within the fold of governmentally operated institutions; the attitude of the President on social security as showing that business is not, at this time at least, to be saddled with further heavy financial burdens; and the statement of Senator Fletcher, and similar assurances from other quarters, as proof that an attempt will be made to keep the whole legislative program at a minimum during the coming session of Congress.

Many Analysts Hold the Opposite Views.

While these interpretations, judging by press reports, reflect the opinion of the majority of business men, it would be a serious error to think that every one is in agreement either on the significance of the various actions listed, or even on the evidence they provide as to there having been a fundamental and lasting change in the attitude of the Administration. Some of the best analysts in the country, measured by accuracy of appraisal in recent years, hold virtually the exact opposite of the above interpretations.

They believe, for example, that the granting of greater freedom to capital movements, while a desirable step, means nothing whatever as an indication of future monetary policy but was the result of a desire on the part of the Treasury to be freed of annoying and unimportant routine while the capital flow is in our direction; that the appointment of Mr. Eccles as governor of the Federal Reserve System means almost the last step in bringing that organization under the domination of the Treasury, and further, that his direction of that organization probably can be interpreted as "liberal" only in case that term is broadened to include inflation; that the President's stand on social security was the result of his having been unable to reach a decision on the particular program that should be adopted rather than a result of his having turned his back definitely on imposing further burdens on business at this time; and that the whole issue of what legislation will be introduced into the coming Congress with the sponsorship of the Administration depends almost entirely upon the trend of business and employment in the next two or three months.

Interpret Actions As Only Creation of "Atmosphere."

What these analysts see, in other words, is a deliberate, and on the whole successful, attempt to create the "atmosphere" that the Administration has had a change of heart as to the part which the Government should play in recovery. They see it as a willingness to have a temporary let-up in Washington developments that are discouraging to business in order to "test" whether private industry will step in and move forward. How long the breathing spell is to last, they do not know. Sixty days, or a little less, is mentioned as the minimum, four months as the probable maximum, although it is understood that some advisers of the Administration believe that a "middle course" should be followed for two years in order to provide a real test of the ability of private business to restore reasonably prosperous conditions.

In support of this point of view these analysts are able to present arguments which are, it seems to me, far more powerful and convincing than those offered by the "turning-to-the-right" school. They emphasize, for example, that according to all reports the present plans of the Administration involve taking care of the unemployment by a huge spending program. The amount usually mentioned is $12,000,000,000. This, it is believed, has the ardent support of Secretary Ickes and, as contrasted with a dole, the support of Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Richberg. Such a spending program means, of course, that all possibility of the budget being balanced must be discarded. This, in turn, means that there will be a continuation of the uncertainty that characterizes a program which is incalculable.

Financial Field Reflects No Change of Policy.

They also emphasize that in the financial field nothing positive has been done to indicate that uncertainty is to be eliminated. This is on the assumption that the capital movement order was solely a matter of convenience, an interpretation, incidentally, that the statement of Secretary Morgenthau apparently supports. Mr. Eccles' appointment, they hold, can be interpreted only as a reflection of a willingness to follow an opportunistic financial policy—the testimony of Mr. Eccles of last year as well as his more recently stated views indicating clearly that he has few convictions, the following out of which would encourage investors to make long-term commitments.

These, then, are some of the high spots in the views of those who are yet unable to accept the current reports that the Administration is through with all experimentation and is determined to follow policies that will encourage private business. It does not mean, it should be emphasized, that they maintain that it would be impossible for the Administration to adopt such policies. Rather, it means merely that as yet they are unconvinced that the Administration has gone beyond the point of creating "atmosphere." They want to see some positive and definite action, instead of mere talk.

Most Metals Turn Irregular During Week

Copper Rules Steady on Expanding Sales; Zinc Prices Decline.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Further irregularity was noted in most of the metal markets this week.

Copper ruled steady on an expanding volume of sales. Domestic buyers were said to have been influenced by receipt of larger orders for finished products, a favorable view of October statistics and reports that American producers were participating in latest efforts to obtain a reduction of world's copper production.

The October figures revealed a reduction of 11,500 tons in refined stocks in the United States, although partially offset by increases abroad.

Zinc Prices Shaded.

Despite resumption of mine curtailment, leading to prospects for a steadier ore market, zinc prices were shaded late in the week. Offerings by some smelters of spot supplies at concessions reflected unsatisfactory demand for nearby requirements, although somewhat better inquiry for early 1935 deliveries was noted.

Lead prices were reduced $1 per ton at the close of a quiet week. For some time sales have been less than daily smelter output and consumers have thus far shown no inclination to anticipate December needs.

On the other hand, antimony continued firm, advancing an additional cent per pound in sympathy with higher Chinese cables, limited offers from the Far East and a scarcity of spot supplies of Chinese grades. Buyers, however, are not inclined to pay the sharply higher prices and business has been dull.

Tin Fluctuates Narrowly.

Tin fluctuated irregularly over a narrow range. The trade generally has adopted a waiting attitude pending expected filing of tin plate prices for 1935 early next week. Mills would then reenter the metal market, it is said, if consumers place their 1935 plate requirements.

Further moderate expansion in steel mill operations to around 27 per cent of capacity was credited to slight increases in demands from miscellaneous buyers whose inventories are now low. Structural awards were larger, but buying by automobile manufacturers has been reserved. Any change in finished prices for the first quarter of 1935 are expected to be announced by November 20.

Scrap prices were advanced 50 cents per ton in the Pittsburgh district.

Wool Futures In Week Gain 8 to 20 Points

New York, Nov. 18.—Prices of wool top futures on the New York Wool Top Exchange registered advances of 8 to 20 points during the past week. Trading was fairly active and distributed over the winter and spring months. The spot price of the exchange standard certified top advanced 15 points during the week, from 83.0 cents to 84.5 cents.

Futures in foreign markets were irregular. At Antwerp, prices declined an eighth to half a penny during the week, while at Roubaix they were unchanged to up 20 centimes. Bradford spot quotations were off three-quarters to 1 penny on the higher types of tops, and unchanged to off a quarter of a penny on the lower grades.

Following is a summary of quotations on the New York Wool Top Exchange for the week ended Friday:

Wallace Eases Crop Reduction

Corn and Hog Production Cut Only 10 Pct.

Easing up the drastic crop-reduction program, Secretary Wallace announced yesterday that Midwestern farmers in 1935 will be asked to keep corn acreage and hog numbers only 10 per cent below their 1932-1933 average production, according to the Associated Press.

The reductions compare with the 20 to 30 per cent cut in corn and 25 per cent cut in hog numbers required under the 1934 contract.

The maximum corn acreage that the new contract signers may plant is 90 per cent of their average during the 1932 and 1933 base period. They may, however, make a 30 per cent cut in acreage, growing a minimum of 70 per cent of the base period, and receive benefit payments for the additional 20 per cent reduction.

The 90 per cent maximum, assuming a return to normal weather conditions, will permit the production of about 250,000,000 bushels of corn in excess of estimated requirements for livestock feeding.

Actress Recovering From Auto Accident

Montecito, Calif., Nov. 18 (AP). Genevieve Tobin, 27, motion picture actress injured yesterday with her mother in an automobile accident, was reported in a favorable condition today. The car in which Miss Tobin was riding with her mother, Mrs. Genevieve Tobin, 50, skidded from the wet pavement and struck a palm tree.

Both women received fractured shoulder bones and bruises.

Trade Is Found Counting Upon Gradual Gains

Moderate Volume Increase Is Expected in Most Active Fields.

New York, Nov. 18.—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Co., of New York, currently comments as follows:

"While formulation of the legislative program for the next session of Congress apparently is causing apprehension in some quarters, Business sentiment in general is being sustained by the growing belief that the Administration will continue to emphasize its program of furthering the process of business recovery, relieving unemployment and stabilizing labor relationships.

"Coincidentally, further indications of moderate improvement in business volumes are becoming evident. Retail trade, one of the brightest aspects of the general situation during recent months, currently is running about 10 per cent above the level a year earlier. A significant feature in this respect is that enlarged unit volume, rather than higher prices, is chiefly responsible for the advance.

"In the steel industry, production has advanced to above 27 per cent of capacity, representing slight gains both as compared with the preceding week and the similar 1933 interval.

"Broadly considered, underlying factors remain favorable for maintenance of the present gradual uptrend in industrial activity, although sharp gains in most lines will probably not be evident before late winter or early spring."

Prices Cut Lower In Coffee Futures

Brazilian Values Stand Unchanged; Mild Grades Barely Steady.

New York, Nov. 18.—Coffee futures were active and lower. The Santos contract lost 8 to 10 points, while the Rio market declined 5 to 15 points. December liquidation in anticipation of first-notice day for December, November 26, had a depressing effect on the Rio contract. December Rio lost 15 points.

The "open" market milreis/dollar rate dropped 250 reis to 13.95 milreis to the United States dollar, increasing the saving to United States importers through the partial negotiation of coffee export bills at the open rate. Interest in spot coffees was reported fair, but buyers' ideas were below existing levels.

Brazilian prices were nominally unchanged in the local market, while "mild" grades were barely steady. Deliveries to consumption so far this month are holding their own with the similar period last year. It is expected in the trade that deliveries against December contracts will be heavy.

"THE IMAGINARY INVALID" MOLIÈRE - Great French dramatist, SUFFERED A FATAL ATTACK OF ILLNESS WHILE ACTING THE PART IN HIS OWN PLAY OF A MAN WHO IMAGINED HE WAS ILL.

IN ANCIENT TARTARY KNOWLEDGE WAS "ACQUIRED" BY EATING BOOKS!
11-19-34

Moliere, great French dramatist of the seventeenth century, spent the last days of his life writing a play and acting in it—a play which was the story of a man who thought he was sick. The author was sick in fact, though the character he portrayed was sick in imagination only, and Moliere in his last appearance in this role was seized with a convulsion, but his audience never knew it—he covered his struggles with a forced laugh.

The play, called "The Imaginary Invalid," was produced first on February 10, 1673, in the Palais Royal, and repeated three more times. On February 17, the day of Moliere's last appearance, he was feeling ill but refused to stay away from the theater.

That night, while on the stage, he suffered a fatal attack of illness. Although he played his part to the end he had to be carried from the theater, and before morning he was dead. Because he was an actor he was not given a regular church burial, and today no one knows where his body lies.

Before the advent of modern printing, books were rare and expensive luxuries closely associated with learned men. This fact gave rise to the curious belief in some places that knowledge could be acquired by eating books. In ancient Tartary some illiterates, seeing no value in the written page, actually ate paper and all in hopes of becoming learned.

Tomorrow: The battle of the echo.

"Muvver," little Willie demanded, "read me the funnies!"

But little Willie's demand will go unheeded until Muvver and Dad have read the funnies for themselves . . . for the funnies or comic strips have family appeal now, and it's a race each morning to see who gets The Washington Post first in order to find out what happened to Winnie Winkle and Dixie Dugan. These modern comics, which you will find in The Post each morning, are human, interesting, appealing . . . and they tell a story better than any novelsit.

We used to be firmly convinced that all

Americans, including us, were heard-hearted old meanies, for we would read the comic strips of that day, and when the hero would slip on a banana peel and break his leg, we'd laugh our fool heads off. Gosh, we thought it was funny to see the Yellow Kid put dynamite in the school stove, or Foxy Grandpa beat his nephew over the head with a baseball bat. In those days, a comic strip artist was made if he could put three "powies" and one "zam" in each picture. A comic strip, fashioned from one bum joke, a violent explosion, and two black eyes, was designed to "keep the kids quiet." But nowadays, they're new . . . thrilling . . . amusing. The marriage of Bim Gump is of National interest, and we'll bet a plugged nickel that more people know Joe Palooka's adventures than can tell you the name of the middleweight champion.

The comic characters found in The Washington Post . . . Dick Tracy, Joe Palooka, the Gumps, Winnie Winkle, Napolean, Benny, Dixie Dugan, Gasoline Alley, Cap Stubbs, Apple Mary, the Bungle Family . . . have lives as full of adventure as the Senate is full of Democrats. Poor, but honest woiking goils, deep-dyed villains, handsome heroes, regular kids romp through the comic strips, and once you get acquainted with these engaging, unpredictable people, you'll turn to the back pages of The Washington Post each morning to enjoy them.

Have you chuckled over the predicaments of poor Benny and his race horse lately? Or thrilled with Dick Tracy as he is held captive by the gangsters? Or admired the warming kindness of Apply Mary? If you haven't, you're missing the best bet to start your morning right, and we advise you to open your Washington Post and read the comics right now.

The next time Senator Whoozis keeps you waiting in the ante-room and sends out word that he's in conference, it's a safe bet that he wants seclusion while he reads Cap Stubbs. There's a lot of us who like to pretend that we read the editorial page first, but, really, we seize the second section of The Washington Post and laugh with Benny and Cap Stubbs before we read The Post Impressionist.

Benny, with his marvelous pantomime, and all the rest of The Post's cartoon family, are waiting to amuse you each morning. They're the best loved characters in comicland.

Walt Mason Himself

The Off Day.

The husky baseball pitcher comes forth, the man of fame; to make that fame the richer he'll win another game. The fans are busy rooting, they greet him with three cheers, there is no sound of hooting resounding in his ears. So long he's been a winner, he knows not how to fail; he'll take the ball and spin her, and his side must prevail. Alas, he pulls a blunder, his arm is on the bum; the fans begin to thunder, denunciations come: The game he plays is rotten, the wild crowd howls and whoops, his triumphs are forgotten, his record loops the loops. The people say he's slipping, he's surely lost his hold, his actions are not gripping as in the days of old. An off day, to his sorrow, has put him on the spot; he'll doubtless play tomorrow a game that's good and hot. The people who are howling have off days, every one; they've seen themselves a-scowling at work that's badly done. You'll see a bunch of teachers among the baseball throng; they're yelling, on the bleachers, their condemnation strong. And every one has fumbled while teaching in his school, he has been sorely humbled and felt himself a fool. You'll see a bunch of writers, an awful row they raise; and all these noisy blighters have had their futile days. You'll see a bunch of tinners who rave around and bray, and few of them are winners on every passing day. Off days, alas, are given, to every human wight, when he, by demons driven, can't do a blamed thing right.

On the Air Today

By George M. Adams, Jr.

ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT, rotund raconteur, familiarly heard Sundays at 9 p. m. with his provocative "This is Woollcott speaking," is the latest to join the C.B.S. Sunday evening shake-up due at the first of the year.

His new time, beginning January 6, will be 7 to 7:30 p. m., when his caustic but entertaining comments will be heard every Sunday evening thereafter at the same time.

Other changes due on that date will bring the Ford Sunday Evening Hour, now heard at 8 p. m., to 9 p. m., thus relieving the tension created by two full-hour symphony orchestras on at the same spot. N.B.C.'s automobile sponsor will continue with its symphony at 8 p. m.

Eddie Cantor and the Hall of Fame, both now heard on N.B.C., will join the C.B.S. cavalcade on January 6. Cantor will be heard from 8 to 8:30 p. m. and the Hall of Fame, with Helen Hayes in a series of dramatic sketches somewhat in the Mary Pickford style, will follow at 8:30 to 9 p. m.

Tito Guizar, another C.B.S. romanticist, will suspend his Sunday 12:30 to 12:45 p. m. serenade with the broadcast December 9. He will return to his present schedule on January 13.

ED ROGERS, an announcer of no mean proportion, as any one will attest who has ever viewed his genial bulk, today brings his well-modulated voice to WMAL after three years of service at WRC. The transfer was effected to allow young Paul Munroe, N. B. C.'s latest addition, a berth at WRC.

A radio veteran, Ed is one of the most capable and popular announcers employed locally by N. B. C. His duties at WMAL will be similar to those he followed at WRC, allowing him ample opportunity to boom out his brisk barytone voice in the company of Bill Coyle, Ted Kimball and Stanley Bell . . . who might be called "The Three Musketeers." Ed, by the way, sang the role of Porthos in that musical comedy on Broadway. He now becomes "The Fourth Musketeer" of WMAL.

"Station Breaks."

DAME SYBIL THORNDIKE, one of England's most celebrated actresses, today makes a special guest appearance in a radio version of "Macbeth," Shakespeare's famous tragedy of the Scottish kings, on WMAL from 3 to 4 p. m. . . . Phil Duey, Frank Luther, Carmen Castillia, Connie Gates, Helen Ward, Jack Parker and Luis Alvarez, are among the well-known broadcasters who have been chosen to serve as vocalists with the orchestras of Kel Murray, Xavier Cugat and Benny Goodman during the forthcoming "Let's Dance" program offering three hours of uninterrupted dance music . . . Juliette Kay, graphologist, will start a new series Tuesdays and Thursdays from WJSV at 9:30 a. m., in which she will analyze handwriting of listeners . . .

Prof. Harold C. Urey, of Columbia University, winner of the 1934 Nobel Prize in Chemistry, will speak on C. B. S. networks today at 4:15 p. m. on his discovery of "heavy water" . . . Lawrence Tibbett will have Deems Taylor, composer, as his guest tomorrow at 8:30 p. m., on his WMAL broadcast. A highlight of the program will be a scene from Taylor's opera, "The King's Henchman." The composer will also be represented by his song, "Captain Stratton's Fancy," a lusty, rollicking ballad if we ever heard one . . . The second of C. B. S.'s series, "Your Home and Mine," will come today at 11:15 a. m., from a delicatessen store in the heart of the Bronx, New York City.

IN preparation for a recent broadcast of "True Stories of Crime," heard from WMAL at 7:45 p. m., producer Shannon Allen decided that a phone conversation called for in the script must be realistically created. He assigned the task of rigging up a device to Frank Fugazzi, WRC engineer.

Frank puttered away for four hours trying out various circuits, combinations and set-ups of phone, receiver and a miniature transmitter. Finally he hit the right gadget . . . a phone with about 20 feet of wire with the receiver at the other end. Batteries were affixed and the thing worked.

During the broadcast the receiver was propped right against a mike and the phone was held by an actor outside of the studio in a corridor. He spoke lines which were heard over the air as if his words were coming right from a receiver. The other actor, speaking into a studio mike, merely heard faint overtures through the studio door which enabled him to meet his cues and carry on the conversation.

Policeman Slashes Throat After Making Hirohito Wait

Inconvenience to Emperor, Only Slight, May Cause Cabinet Crisis.

Tokyo, Nov. 18 (AP).—A police sergeant, who slashed his throat in remorse because he took the wrong turn and inconvenienced an emperor, was given a chance for recovery tonight.

The inconvenience to Emperor Hirohito was not great, but the embarrassment was enormous. Juei Honda, the sergeant, tried to follow the code.

Hirohito was touring Gumma Prefecture with his entourage, and arrived ceremoniously at Kiryu, center of the silk industry.

Honda's pilot car preceding the royal automobile took a wrong turn, causing the procession to travel streets considered inadequately policed. Nothing happened, but there was a mixup in schedule.

Kenji Matsuda, minister of education, was to have been received by the visiting ruler at Nishi Technical College. The Emperor arrived ahead of schedule and Matsuda, who was resting, was not properly clothed to be received by his monarch. Hirohito had to wait 20 minutes.

Honda's wife later found him clad in his best uniform and covered with blood. At a hospital they thought at first he would die, but physicians said late tonight he might live after all.

Others were remorseful also. The governor and other officials of the prefecture were reported intending to resign, while Home Minister Fumio Goto, whose ministry is responsible for all police matters, was considered likely to be compelled to step out, possibly precipitating a cabinet crisis.

Wild Eagle Killed by Auto.

Kansas City, Nov. 18 (AP).—An eagle, deserting its native haunts for the city, met death here last night, apparently a victim of a motor car. It was found lying in a street. Its wing-spread measured 5½ feet.

Frank Murphy Denies Michigan Candidacy

Manila, Nov. 18 (AP).—A report from Detroit that he plans to run for Governor of Michigan in 1936 was denied today by Governor General Frank Murphy.

The Governor General said he would consider his assignment to the Philippines completed when the decade for the transition of the islands to the commonwealth government was established, possibly next August.

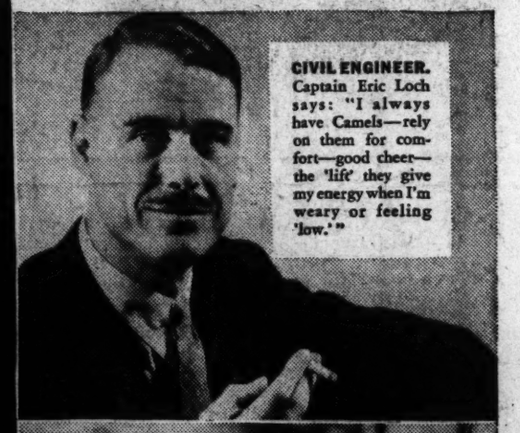
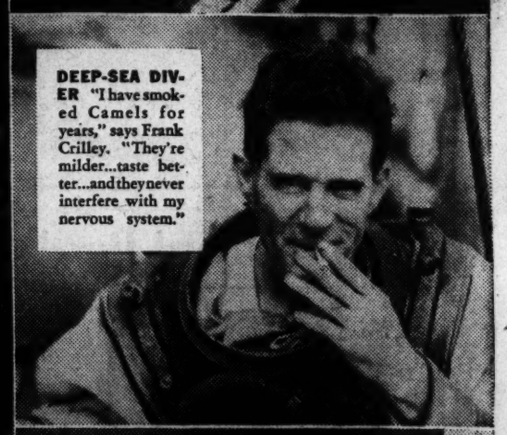
NO MORE ENERGY?...

GET A LIFT WITH A CAMEL!

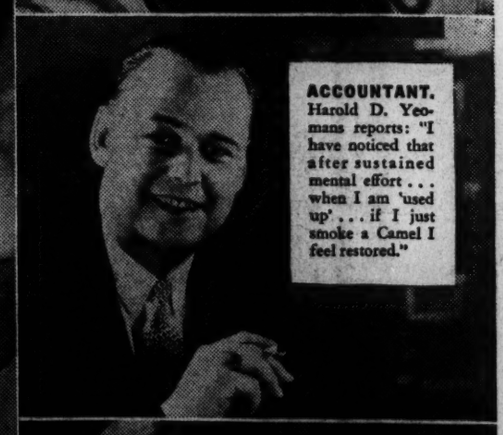
● Whether their daily tasks carry them through crowded city streets, or impenetrable jungles, Camel smokers agree on the delightful "lift" they get from smoking a Camel. Mrs. William LaVarre, famous explorer, whose treks through dangerous South American jungles have taught her the vital necessity of keeping up her energy reserve, has this to say about Camels: "We took 30,000 Camels with us on our last expedition. Any time I'm tired, I just stop and smoke a Camel. It wakes up my energy in no time. Smoking Camels steadily, I find, does not affect one's nerves."



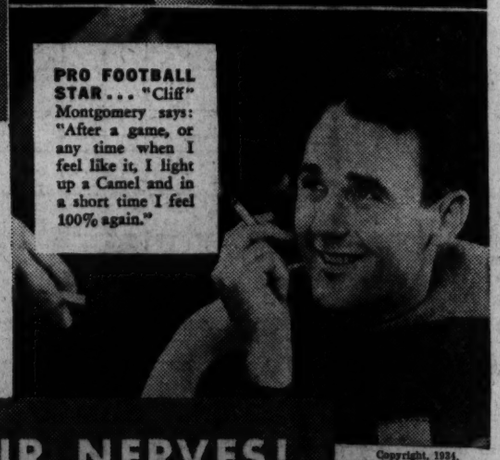
CIVIL ENGINEER. Captain Eric Loch says: "I always have Camels—rely on them for comfort—good cheer—the 'lift' they give my energy when I'm weary or feeling 'low.'"



DEEP-SEA DIVER "I have smoked Camels for years," says Frank Crilley. "They're milder...taste better...and they never interfere with my nervous system."



ACCOUNTANT. Harold D. Yeomans reports: "I have noticed that after sustained mental effort . . . when I am 'used up' . . . if I just smoke a Camel I feel restored."



PRO FOOTBALL STAR . . . "Cliff" Montgomery says: "After a game, or any time when I feel like it, I light up a Camel and in a short time I feel 100% again."

LEAF-TOBACCO EXPERTS AGREE:

"Camels are made from finer, More Expensive Tobaccos—Turkish and Domestic—than any other popular brand."
